

This is a digital copy of a book that was preserved for generations on library shelves before it was carefully scanned by Google as part of a project to make the world's books discoverable online.

It has survived long enough for the copyright to expire and the book to enter the public domain. A public domain book is one that was never subject to copyright or whose legal copyright term has expired. Whether a book is in the public domain may vary country to country. Public domain books are our gateways to the past, representing a wealth of history, culture and knowledge that's often difficult to discover.

Marks, notations and other marginalia present in the original volume will appear in this file - a reminder of this book's long journey from the publisher to a library and finally to you.

Usage guidelines

Google is proud to partner with libraries to digitize public domain materials and make them widely accessible. Public domain books belong to the public and we are merely their custodians. Nevertheless, this work is expensive, so in order to keep providing this resource, we have taken steps to prevent abuse by commercial parties, including placing technical restrictions on automated querying.

We also ask that you:

- + Make non-commercial use of the files We designed Google Book Search for use by individuals, and we request that you use these files for personal, non-commercial purposes.
- + Refrain from automated querying Do not send automated queries of any sort to Google's system: If you are conducting research on machine translation, optical character recognition or other areas where access to a large amount of text is helpful, please contact us. We encourage the use of public domain materials for these purposes and may be able to help.
- + Maintain attribution The Google "watermark" you see on each file is essential for informing people about this project and helping them find additional materials through Google Book Search. Please do not remove it.
- + Keep it legal Whatever your use, remember that you are responsible for ensuring that what you are doing is legal. Do not assume that just because we believe a book is in the public domain for users in the United States, that the work is also in the public domain for users in other countries. Whether a book is still in copyright varies from country to country, and we can't offer guidance on whether any specific use of any specific book is allowed. Please do not assume that a book's appearance in Google Book Search means it can be used in any manner anywhere in the world. Copyright infringement liability can be quite severe.

About Google Book Search

Google's mission is to organize the world's information and to make it universally accessible and useful. Google Book Search helps readers discover the world's books while helping authors and publishers reach new audiences. You can search through the full text of this book on the web at <http://books.google.com/>

Malone. E. 167.

A

FEW NOTES ON SHAKESPEARE.

LONDON :
PRINTED BY ROBINSON, LEVY, AND FRANKLYN,
Great New Street and Fetter Lane.

A FEW NOTES
ON SHAKESPEARE;

WITH OCCASIONAL REMARKS ON THE EMENDATIONS OF THE MANUSCRIPT-CORRECTOR IN MR. COLLIER'S
COPY OF THE FOLIO 1632.

BY THE REV. ALEXANDER DYCE.

LONDON:
JOHN RUSSELL SMITH, 36 SOHO SQUARE.

MDCCLIII.

PREFACE.

IN the course of the following remarks I have endeavoured to shew that sundry of the recently-published Emendations by the Manuscript-corrector of the folio 1632 are altogether erroneous; and I might have noticed a variety of others by that mysterious personage, which, I feel assured, are such as cannot stand the test of criticism. But the reader must not therefore suppose that I consider Mr. Collier's volume as useless to the future editors of Shakespeare: my opinion is, that while it abounds with alterations ignorant, tasteless, and wanton, it also occasionally presents corrections which require no authority to recommend them, because common sense declares them to be right.

Since these sheets were printed off, I have found that the quotation from Cotgrave at p. 71 was long ago adduced by Mr. Singer in his edition of Shakespeare; and that the emendation given as my own at p. 36 had previously occurred to the same gentleman.

A. D.

CONTENTS.

	PAGE
THE TEMPEST	9
THE TWO GENTLEMEN OF VERONA	17
THE MERRY WIVES OF WINDSOR	18
MEASURE FOR MEASURE	24
THE COMEDY OF ERRORS	28
MUCH ADO ABOUT NOTHING	37
LOVE'S LABOUR'S LOST	48
A MIDSUMMER-NIGHT'S DREAM	61
THE MERCHANT OF VENICE	64
AS YOU LIKE IT	68
THE TAMING OF THE SHREW	70
ALL'S WELL THAT ENDS WELL	72
TWELFTH NIGHT	75
THE WINTER'S TALE	79
KING JOHN	83
RICHARD II.	92
FIRST PART OF HENRY IV.	93
SECOND PART OF HENRY IV.	97
SECOND PART OF HENRY VI.	99
THIRD PART OF HENRY VI.	101
RICHARD III.	103
HENRY VIII.	105

	PAGE
TROILUS AND CRESSIDA	107
ROMEO AND JULIET	109
JULIUS CÆSAR	116
MACBETH	118
HAMLET	134
KING LEAR	146
OTHELLO	147
ANTONY AND CLEOPATRA	150
CYMBELINE	155

A FEW NOTES,

ETC.

THE TEMPEST.

Act i. sc. 2.

"The sky, it seems, would pour down stinking pitch,
But that the sea, mounting to the welkin's cheek,
Dashes the fire out."

"The manuscript corrector of the folio, 1632, has substituted heat for 'cheek,' which is not an unlikely corruption by a person writing only by the ear." Collier's Notes and Emendations, &c. p. 2. "On the whole, heat in this place seems to be one of those alterations, which, though supported by some probability, it might be inexpedient to insert in the text." Id. p. 503.

I must be allowed to protest against the Manuscript-corrector's "heat," as not supported by any probability: in fact, it is an alteration equally tasteless and absurd.

Act i. sc. 2.

"Lend thy hand,
And pluck my magic garment from me.—So;
[Lays down his mantle.
Lie there my art."]

B

Here Steevens observes (from Fuller), that "Lord Burleigh, when he put off his gown at night, used to say, Lie there, Lord Treasurer."—So in A Pleasant Commodity called Looke about you, which was printed in 1600 (and therefore preceded The Tempest), Skinke puts off his hermit's robes with a similar expression;

"Rob. Adew, good father.—Holla there, my horse!

[Exit.

Skin. Vp-spur the kicking jade, while I make speede
To conjure Skinke out of his hermits weede.

Lye there religion."

Sig. A 2.

and in Chettle's Tragedy of Hoffman, 1631 (which was also an earlier play than *The Tempest), Lorrique, throwing off the disguise of a French doctor, says;

"Doctor lie there. Lorrique, like thyselfe appeare."

Sig. G.

I may add, that in Shadwell's Virtuoso, Sir Samuel Harty lays aside his female dress with the words, "So, tyrewoman, lie thou there." Act iv. p. 388, Works, ed. 1720.

Act i. sc. 2.

"With hair up-staring."

Many readers of Shakespeare are perhaps not aware how common this expression was formerly. It not only found a place in the most serious poetry, as here, and in Chapman's Hero and Leander (Marlowe's Works, iii. 91. ed. Dyce), but belonged to the phraseology of daily life:

* See Henslowe's Diary, p. 229, ed. Shak. Soc.

"Les cheveux luy dressent. His haire stares, or stands annend." Cotgrave's Dict. sub Dresser; and compare Florio's Dict. sub Arricciare.

Act i. sc. 2.

"Foot it featly here and there."

This expression, which is now so familiar to us from Ariel's song, was certainly an unusual one in the days of Shakespeare, who probably caught it from a line in Lodge's Glaucus and Scilla, 1589,—

"Footing it featlie on the grassie ground."

Sig. A 2.

Act i. sc. 2.

"my prime request,

Which I do last pronounce, is, O you wonder!

If you be maid or no?

Mira.

No wonder, sir;

But, certainly a maid."

In a note on this passage, in his ed. of Shakespeare, Mr. Collier observes; "Ferdinand has at first supposed Miranda a goddess, and now inquires if she be really a mortal; not a celestial being, but a maiden. 'Maid' is used in its general sense. Miranda's answer is to be taken in the same sense as Ferdinand's question."

I differ entirely from Mr. Collier about the meaning of Miranda's answer. She plays on the word maid:—"But, certainly a maid," i. e. a virgin.

Act iii. sc. 1.

"But these sweet thoughts do even refresh my labours;
Most busy-less when I do it."

The first folio has,

"Most busy lest, when I do it;"

the second folio,

"Most busy, least when I do it."

The reading "busy-less" is Theobald's.

According to Mr. Collier (Notes and Emendations, &c. p. 11), the controversy about this passage "seems set at rest by the manuscript correction in the folio 1632;" which is,—

"'Most busy—blest, when I do it.'"

That is to say, he deems himself blest even by heavy toils, when they are made light by the thoughts of Miranda; he was 'most busy,' but still blest, when so employed. It is right to add that this emendation is, like a few others, upon an erasure, as if something had been written there before: perhaps the page had been blotted."

Now, I decidedly think—that the Manuscript-corrector's emendation is forced and awkward in the very extreme;—that Mr. Collier is as unsuccessful in defending it, as he was when in his edition of Shakespeare he defended the old misprint, "Most busy, least;"—and that the conjecture of Theobald, "busy-less," is far more likely to be the true reading than the Manuscript-corrector's scarcely intelligible alteration, which (as is plain from what is stated about the erasure) was not his first attempt to set the passage right.

Act iv. sc. 1.

"Pro. If I have too austere-ly punish'd you,
Your compensation makes amends; for I
Have given you here a thread of mine own life
Or that for which I live."

Mr. Collier observes (Notes and Emendations, &c. p. 12); "The text has been much disputed, and for 'third' of the old printed copy, the corrector of the folio, 1632, has written thrid (i.e. thread) in the margin. This fact may possibly be decisive of the question."

Mr. Collier is hardly justified in saying that "the text has been much disputed." "Thread" has been adopted by all the recent editors, except Mr. Collier himself, who strenuously supported what he is now willing to reject on the authority of the Manuscript-corrector.

In case any future editor should still be inclined to make Prospero term Miranda "a third of his life," it may be well to remark here,—that in the language of poetry, from the earliest times, a beloved object has always been spoken of, not as the third, but as the HALF of another's life or soul: (so Meleager, ἀμισύ μιν ψυχῆς; and Horace, "animæ dimidium meæ").

Act iv. sc. 1.

"And, like this insubstantial pageant faded, Leave not a rack behind."

So this famous passage stands in all editions old and new. But I believe that Malone's objection to the reading, "a rack," is unanswerable. "No instance," he observes, "has yet been produced where rack is used to signify a single small fleeting cloud;" in other words,—though our early writers very frequently make mention of "the rack," they never say "a rack." Malone adds, "I incline to think that rack is a mis-spelling for wrack, i.e. wreck;" and I now am thoroughly convinced that such is the case. In authors of the age of Elizabeth and James I have repeatedly met with rack put for wrack; and in all the early editions of Milton's Paradise Lost which I possess,—viz. the first, 1667, the second, 1674, the third, 1678, the fourth, 1688, and the eighth, 1707,—I find,—

"Now dreadful deeds

Might have ensued, nor only Paradise

In this commotion, but the starry cope

Of Heaven perhaps, or all the elements

At least had gone to rack [i. e. wrack=wreck]," &c.

B. iv. 990.

"A world devote to universal rack [i. e. wrack=wreck]."

B. xi. 821.

Act iv. sc. 1.

"Come, hang them on this line."

"To the old stage-direction, Enter Ariel, loaden with glistening apparel, the manuscript corrector of the folio, 1632, has added the explanatory words, Hang it on the line; but whether we are to understand a line tree (as has been suggested by Mr. Hunter, in his learned Essay on the Tempest, 8vo. 1839), or a mere rope, is not stated." Collier's Notes and Emendations, &c. p. 13.

With all my respect for Mr. Hunter's learned labours, I must confess that I think him entirely wrong in the matter of the "line."

If no other objections could be urged against Mr. Hunter's acceptance of the word line, we surely have a decisive one in the joke of Stephano, "Now, jerkin, you are like to lose your hair,"—a joke to which it is impossible to attach any meaning, unless we suppose that the line was a hair-line. Mr. Knight observes; "In a woodcut of twelve distinct figures of trades and callings of the time of James I. (see Smith's 'Cries of London,' p. 15), and of which there is a copy in the British Museum, we have the cry of 'Buy a hair-line'" And in Lyly's Midas, a barber's apprentice facetiously says, "All my mistres' lynes that she dryes her cloathes on, are made only of Mustachio stuffe [i. e. of the cuttings of moustachios]." Sig. g 2, ed. 1592.

Act iv. sc. 1.

"Cal. The dropsy drown this fool! what do you mean,
To doat thus on such luggage? Let's alone,
And do the murder first."

So the old copies. Mr. Knight follows them, quoting Steevens's preposterous suggestion that "'Let's alone' may mean—'Let you and I only go to commit the murder, leaving Trinculo, who is so solicitous about the trash of dress, behind us.'"—Mr. Collier prints (with a novel abbreviation) "Let 't alone."—Malone alters "Let's alone" to "Let it alone,"—because, he says, "Caliban has used the expression before,"—the very reason (as will be evident to any one who carefully compares the two passages) why it should not be repeated here.

Has none of the commentators, then, been led by the words, "And do the murder first," to the lection obviously required in what immediately precedes? Yes: Theobald's sagacity did not forsake him here; but his certain emendation is now only to be found among the rubbish of the Variorum Shakespeare, in a very foolish note by Malone, which concludes with, "Mr. Theobald reads — 'Let's along'!"

Act v. sc. 1.

"The entrance of the Cell opens, and discovers FERDINAND and MIRANDA playing at chess."

There may have been something like this in the novel or tale which furnished Shakespeare with the materials for The Tempest; but if that was not the case, and if The Tempest was first produced shortly before the year 1611, it is not improbable that the idea of "discovering" Ferdinand and Miranda engaged at chess was suggested to Shakespeare by a similar "discovery" in Barnaby Barnes's Divils Charter, printed in 1607 ("As it was plaide before the King's Maiestie, vpon Candlemasse night last, by his Maiesties Seruants. But more exactly reuewed, corrected, and augmented since by the Author for the more pleasure and profit of the Reader").

In that tragedy, Cæsar Borgia, after taking Katherine prisoner and making her believe that he had put to death her two sons, says,—

"Come hither, Katherine, wonder of thy sex,
The grace of all Italian womanhood.
Cæsar shall neuer prooue dishonourable:
Behold thy children liuing in my tent.

He discoureth his Tent where her two sonnes were at Cardes."

Sig. 1.

THE TWO GENTLEMEN OF VERONA.

Act i. sc. 1.

"Speed. Twenty to one, then, he is shipp'd already,
And I have play'd the sheep in losing him."

To the examples given by the editors of ship used for sheep, add the following one; "A hood shall flap up and downe heere, and this ship-skin cap shall be put off." Dekker's Satiromastix, 1602, sig. F 3.

Act i. sc. 1.

"a laced mutton."

In this very common cant expression for a courtesan, the meaning of laced has (like many other things equally unimportant) been a good deal disputed. Perhaps the mutton was called laced with a quibble—courtesans being notoriously fond of finery, and also frequently subjected to the whip: Du Bartas tells us that St. Louis put down the stews,

"Lacing with lashes their unpitied skin Whom lust or lucre had bestowed therein."

Works, by Sylvester,—St. Louis the King,
p. 539, ed. 1641.

But in the present passage is "laced mutton" to be regarded as synonymous with courtesan? I doubt it. When Speed applies that term to Julia, he probably uses it in the much less offensive sense of—a richly-attired piece of woman's flesh.

THE MERRY WIVES OF WINDSOR.

Act i. sc. 3.

“ Let me see thee froth, and lime.”

“ The first,” says Steevens, “ was done by putting soap into the bottom of the tankard when they drew the beer; the other, by mixing lime with the sack (i. e. sherry) to make it sparkle in the glass.”

But I question if there be any allusion in this passage to frothing beer by means of soap. Compare Greene’s Quip for an Vpstart Courtier; “ You, Tom Tapster, that tap your small cans of beere to the poore, and yet fill them halfe full of froth,” &c. Sig. F 2, ed. 1620.

Act i. sc. 3.

“ she discourses, she carves, she gives the leer of invitation.”

Mr. Collier (Notes and Emendations, &c. p. 30) writes thus. “ A misprint in the old editions of ‘carves’ for craves, has occasioned some difficulty in the passage where Falstaff, speaking of the expected result of his enterprise against Mrs. Ford, observes, as the words have been invariably given, ‘I spy entertainment in her; she discourses, she carves, she gives the leer of invitation.’ A note in the margin of the corrected folio, 1632, shews that we ought to read ‘she craves, she gives the leer of invitation.’ There seems no sufficient reason for supposing that ‘carves’ ought to be taken in the figurative sense of wooes; and although ladies might now and then ‘carve’ to guests, in the literal meaning of the word (as in the passage quoted by Boswell from Webster's 'Vittoria Corombona,' Shakesp. by Malone, viii. 38), yet carving was undoubtedly an accomplishment peculiarly belonging to men. Falstaff evidently, from the context, intends to say that Mrs. Ford has a craving for him, and therefore gave 'the leer of invitation.' The misprint was a very easy one, occasioned merely by the transposition of a letter, and any forced construction is needless."

I read with something more than surprise this elaborate defence of "craves,"—an alteration which (whether made by the Manuscript-corrector suo periculo, or derived by him from the prompter's-book) originated in sheer ignorance of the word carve having been occasionally employed, at an earlier period, in a sense altogether different from that of cutting up meat. And surely, if Mr. Collier had been acquainted with Mr. Hunter's remarks on that peculiar use of the word, he would at once have acknowledged that here the Manuscript-corrector is egregiously mistaken.

Mr. Hunter (New Illustr. of Shakespeare, i. 215), comparing the present passage with that in Love's Labour's lost, act v. sc. 2,—

"He can carve too and lisp : why, this is he That kiss'd away his hand in courtesy,"— observes; "The commentators have no other idea of the word carve, than that it denotes the particular action of carving at table. But it is a quite different word. It occurs in a very rare poetic tract, entitled A Prophecie of Cadwallader, last King of the Brittaines, by William Herbert, 4to. 1604, which opens with a description of Fortune, and of some who had sought to gain her favour :

'Then did this Queen her wandering coach ascend,
 Whose wheels were more inconstant than the wind :
 A mighty troop this empress did attend ;
 There might you Caius Marius carving find,
 And martial Sylla courting Venus kind.'

To the lines adduced by Mr. Hunter, I have to add the following passages.

"Her amorous glances are her accusers ; her very looks write sonnets in thy commendations ; she carves thee at board, and cannot sleepe for dreaming on thee in bedde." Day's Ile of Gulls, 1606, sig. D.

"And, if thy rival be in presence too,
 Seem not to mark, but do as others do ;
 Salute him friendly, give him gentle words,
 Return all courtesies that he affords ;
 Drink to him, carve him, give him compliment ;
 This shall thy mistress more than thee torment."

Beaumont's Remedy of Love,*—B. and Fletcher's Works, xi. 483, ed. Dyce.

"Desire to eat with her, carve her, drink to her, and still among intermingle your petition of grace and acceptance into her favour." Fletcher and Shakespeare's Two Noble Kinsmen,—B. and Fletcher's Works, xi. 414, ed. Dyce (where Seward, thinking that the cutting up of meat was in question, silently printed "carve for her").

* Beaumont's Remedy of Love is a very free imitation of Ovid's Remedia Amoris ; and (as far as I can discover) the only part of the original which answers to the present passage is—

"Hunc quoque, quo quondam nimium rivale dolebas, Vellem desineres hostis habere loco.
 At certe, quamvis odio remanente, saluta."

v. 791.

Carving, says Mr. Hunter, "would seem to mean some form of action which indicated the desire that the person to whom it was addressed should be attentive and propitious." Whatever was its exact nature, it would appear, from the three passages last cited, to have been a sort of salutation which was practised more especially at table.*

To return, for a moment, to the Manuscript-corrector's emendation. Does Mr. Collier see nothing absurd in "Mrs. Ford craving (i. e. having a craving for) Falstaff?"—(she might have had a craving for a Windsor pear.) Is he sensible of no impropriety in "craving" (a word which expresses not an action, but a feeling) being interposed between "she discourses" and "she gives the leer of invitation?"

Act ii. sc. 1.

"Will you go, An-heires?"

"Warburton suggested 'heris, the old Scotch word for master;' Steevens, hearts; Malone, hear us; Boaden, cava-

* Mr. Halliwell, in his Dict. of Arch. and Prov. Words, has; "CARVE. To woo. Mr. Hunter, Illustrations, i. 215, has the merit of pointing out the peculiar use of this word, although he has not discovered its meaning, which is clearly ascertained from the use of the substantive carver in Lilly's Mother Bombie, 'neither father nor mother, kith nor kinne, shall bee her carver in a husband; shee will fall too where shee likes best.'"—I cannot agree with Mr. Halliwell in thinking that the meaning of carve is ascertained by this passage from Mother Bombie: in fact, Lilly there uses "carver" in its common acceptation, as is manifest from the conclusion of the passage,—"shee will fall to where shee likes best." Compare Don Quixote; "'Why, an't please you,' quoth Sancho, 'Teresa bids me make sure work with your worship, and that we may have less talking and more doing; that a man must not be his own carver; that he who cuts does not shuffle,'" &c. Vol. iii. 200, ed. Edin. 1822. (Motteux's trans.) liers, &c. The manuscript corrector of the folio, 1632, merely changes one letter, and omits two, and leaves the passage, 'Will you go on, here?' * * * It is singular that nobody seems ever to have conjectured that on here might be concealed under 'An-heires.'" Collier's Notes and Emendations, &c. p. 33.

To me it appears altogether unlikely that two such common words as "on here" should have been mistaken, either by copyist or compositor, for "An-heires;" and I apprehend that, when the Manuscript-corrector altered the vox nihili by "merely changing one letter and omitting two," he at the same time was far from feeling confident that "on here" was "concealed under An-heires."

There is a passage in act ii. sc. 3 of Fletcher's Beggars' Bush, as exhibited in the folio, 1647, which, unless I am much deceived, enables us to determine positively what word ought to take the place of "An-heires" in the text of the great dramatist. For my own part at least,—since I find in that folio, p. 80,

"Nay, Sir, mine heire Van-dunck
Is a true Statesman,"—

I can no longer doubt that "An-heires" is a misprint for "Min-heires," and that Hanmer (whose emendation Mr. Collier does not even notice) restored the genuine reading, when he altered "Will you go, An-heires?" to "Will you go, Mynheers?"

We have no reason to suppose that the word Mynheer (which, as we have just seen, is used by Fletcher) was less known in England when Shakespeare wrote The Merry Wives of Windsor than it is at present (perhaps, indeed, by means of the soldiers who returned from the wars in the Netherlands, it was formerly better known than now); nor is there any reason why it should not have been in the Host's vocabulary as well as bully-rook.*

* I may just observe that "Bully-rook" (which is only another form of the word) occurs over and over again in Shadwell's Sullen Lovers: see his Works, vol. i. pp. 26, 37, 45, 46, 62, 69, 74, 83, 84, 101, 102, 108.

MEASURE FOR MEASURE.

Act i. sc. 2.

"Bawd. What's to do here, Thomas Tapster?"

"Why," says Douce, "does she call the clown by this name, when it appears from his own showing that his name was Pompey? Perhaps she is only quoting some old saying or ballad."

Because Thomas or Tom was the name commonly applied to a Tapster; for the sake of the alliteration, it would seem. See the passage cited from Greene, at p. 18.

Act ii. sc. 2.

"How would you be,
If he, which is the top of judgment, should
But judge you as you are?"

"We meet," says Mr. Collier, "with a bold and striking emendation in one of Isabella's noble appeals to Angelo The amended folio, 1632, has it,—

'How would you be,
If he, which is the God of judgment, should
But judge you as you are?'

This is not to be considered at all in the light of a profane use of the name of the Creator, as in oaths and exclamations; and while top may easily have been misheard by the scribe for 'God,' the latter word, though the meaning is of course the same, adds to the power and grandeur of the passage." Notes and Emendations, &c. p. 45.

What Mr. Collier calls "a bold and striking emendation," deserves rather to be characterised as rash and wanton in the extreme.

That very expression, which did not suit the taste of the Manuscript-corrector, occurs in another mighty poet,—one whose fame is as imperishable as Shakespeare's. In the sixth Canto of the Purgatorio, Dante, having met with certain spirits who were anxious to obtain the prayers of the living, thus addresses his conductor ;

" E' par che tu mi nieghi,
O luce mia, espresso in alcun testo,
Che decreto del Cielo orazion pieghi:
E queste genti pregan pur di questo.
Sarebbe dunque loro speme vana?
O non m' è il detto tuo ben manifesto?"

Virgil replies ;

" La mia scrittura è piana,
E la speranza di costor non falla,
Se ben si guarda con la mente sana;
Chè cima di giudicio non s' avvala,
Perchè foco d' amor compia in un punto
Ciò che dee soddisfar chi qui s' astalla," &c.
v. 28, sqq.

Act ii. sc. 2.

" Not with fond shekels of the tested gold," &c.

" It is spelt sickles in the old copies, but the true word may be circles; and the manuscript corrector of the folio, 1632, has altered 'sickles' to sirkles, paying no other attention to the spelling of the word. Nevertheless 'shekels' may be right, and it is used, exactly with the same spelling, by Lodge in his 'Catharos,' 1591, sign. c, where we read, ‘ Here in Athens the father hath suffred his sonne to bee hanged for forty sickles, and hee worth four hundred talents.’” Notes and Emendations, &c. p. 45.

After the quotation from Lodge, Mr. Collier might have been sure that the Manuscript-corrector's alteration was quite wrong. Compare also Peele's David and Bethsabe;

“ That so I might have given thee for thy pains
Ten silver shekels [old ed. “sickles”] and a golden waist.”
Works, ii. 63, ed. Dyce, 1829.

“ Circles of gold,” I conceive, could only mean crowns (diadems) of gold. (In Macbeth, act i. sc. 5, we have “the golden round,” i. e. diadem.)

Act iii. sc. 1.

“ Servile to all the skyey influences.”

Our lexicographers adduce no other example of “skyey” except the present. Perhaps Shakespeare found it in a writer, from whom (as will afterwards be shewn) he borrowed a remarkable expression for Macbeth;

“ So on I hasted at my jades behest,
As whilom Phaeton in his skyey carte,” &c.
A Fig for Fortune, 1596, by Anthony Copley, p. 20.

Act iii. sc. 1.

“ her combinate husband.”

The late W. S. Rose, after giving some instances of the “close and whimsical relation there often is between English and Italian idiom,” concludes with this remark. “Thus every Italian scholar understands ‘her combinat husband' to mean her husband elect; and at this hour there is nothing more commonly in an Italian's mouth than 'Se si puo combinarla' (if we can bring it to bear), when speaking with reference to any future arrangement." Note on his translation of Orlando Furioso, vol. iv. 47.

THE COMEDY OF ERRORS.

Act ii. sc. 1.

"Ant. S. You would all this time have proved, there is no time for all things.

"Dro. S. Marry, and did, sir ; namely in no time to recover hair lost by nature."

So the first folio erroneously reads. Malone printed "namely, e'en no time" (which sounds oddly enough); and Mr. Collier adopts it, without mentioning that it is a modern reading,—a very unusual oversight in him.

The second folio gives what is evidently right,— "namely, no time to recover hair lost by nature."

Act iii. sc. 1.

"Maud, Bridget, Marian, Cicely, Gillian, Gin."

In this line, though it rhymes with one ending in "let us in," the modern editors (with the exception of Mr. Collier, who retains the above spelling) print "Jen'."

The name should be spelt "Jin" (a contraction of Jinny; see Cotgrave's Dict. in Jannette).

Act iii. sc. 1.

"Luce. Have at you with another ; that's,—When ? can you tell ?"

This proverbial question occurs in Day's Law-Trickes, 1608 ;

" Still good in law ; ile fetch him ore of all,
 Get all, pursse all, and be possest of all,
 And then conclude the match, marrie, at least,
 When, can you tell?"

Sig. D 3.

Act iii. sc. 2.

" Far more, far more, to you do I decline."

Mr. Collier observes that this "may be reconciled to sense ; but the reading of the corrector of the folio, 1632, 'incline,' which makes a very trifling change, seems preferable." Notes and Emendations, &c. p. 61.

The Manuscript-corrector merely substituted a word more familiar to himself and those of his time than "decline." That the latter is what Shakespeare wrote, is not to be doubted : compare Greene ; " That the loue of a father, as it was royall, so it ought to be impartiall, neither declining to the one nor to the other, but as deeds doe merite." Penelope's Web, sig. G 4, ed. 1601.

Act iii. sc. 2.

" Dro. S. Swart, like my shoe, but her face nothing like so clean kept : for why? she sweats ; a man may go over shoes in the grime of it."

So, in all editions, an interrogation-point is wrongly put after "why." The words ought to run,—"for why she sweats ; a man," &c.,—" for why" being equivalent to because, for this reason that. Compare ;

" But let me see ; what time a day ist now ?
 It cannot be imagin'd by the sunne,
 For why I haue not seene it shine to daie," &c.

A Warning for Faire Women, 1599, sig. E 4.

"Content he lies, and bathes him in the flame,
And goes
Not forth,

For why he cannot live without the same."

Greene's Newer too late, sig. r 2, ed. 1611.

"Thomas, kneele downe; and, if thou art resolu'd,
I will absolue thee here from all thy sinnes,
For why the deed is meritorious."

The Troublesome Raigne of King John (Part Sec.), sig. L 2, ed. 1622.

Act iv. sc. 2.

"A devil in an everlasting garment hath him," &c.

The following description of a Sergeant is worth quoting, as it was drawn, no doubt, from the life: "One of them had on a buffe-leather jerkin, all greasie before with the droppings of beere that fell from his beard, and, by his side, a skeine like a brewers bung knife; and muffled hee was in a cloke turn'd ouer his nose, as though hee had beene ashamed to shew his face." (We are afterwards told that he is a Sergeant.) Greene's Quip for an Vpstart Courtier, sig. D 3, ed. 1620.

Act iv. sc. 2.

"Have you not heard men say,
That Time comes stealing on by night and day?
If he be in debt and theft, and a sergeant in the way,
Hath he not reason to turn back an hour in a day?"

In the third line the old copies have "If I be in debt." Malone altered "I" to "he,"—which his successors adopt. Rowe read, "If Time be in debt," &c., and, I think, rightly: in the ms. used for the first folio, the word (because it had occurred so often just before) was probably written here contractedly, "T," which the compositor might easily mistake for "I."

Act iv. sc. 3.

"Ant. S. Avoid then, fiend."

"The manuscript-corrector of the folio, 1632, has it, 'Avoid, thou fiend!' which is probably accurate, but the change is trifling." Collier's Notes and Emendations, &c. p. 62.

Here the Manuscript-corrector has anticipated me. On the margin of the Varior. Shakespeare, I noted down what follows several years ago. "The word 'then' seems uncalled for by any thing that Dromio has just said: Antipholus had already declared that the lady was 'Satan' and 'the devil:'—surely, the right reading is 'Avoid thee, fiend!'"

I must add,—first, that "thee" is preferable to "thou," because it comes nearer the old reading "then;" and secondly, that "Avoid thee, fiend!" is much more common than "Avoid, thou fiend!" (the former occurs frequently even in modern writers; e.g.

"Avoid thee, fiend! with cruel hand
Shake not the dying sinner's sand," &c.

Scott's Marmion, c. vi.)

Act iv. sc. 4.

"Ant. E. You minion, you; are these your customers?"

"A customer is used in Othello for a common woman. Here it seems to signify one who visits such women." MALONE.

This is the only note on the passage; and a surprising note it is.—“Your customers” means nothing more than—the people who frequent your house. (“Auentore, a customer, a commer or a frequentor to a place.” Florio’s Dict.)

Act v. sc. 1.

“The place of depth and sorry execution.”

“Is amended in manuscript in the folio, 1632, to

‘The place of death and solemn execution.’”

Collier’s Notes and Emendations, &c. p. 63.

That “depth” was a misprint for “death,” I did not require the authority of the Manuscript-corrector to convince me; but I am glad that he has pronounced it to be so, because the probability of any future editor retaining it is thereby considerably lessened. (Even Mr. Collier, who gave “death” in his text, was afterwards troubled with great doubts whether he had done rightly: see the “Additional Notes” to his Shakespeare, i. cclxxxv.)

According to Mr. Hunter, “‘The place of depth’ means, in the Greek story, the Barathrum, the deep pit, into which offenders were cast. So Jonson,—

‘Opinion! let gross opinion sink

As deep as Barathrum.’

Every Man in his Humour, ed. 1601.”

New Illustr. of Shakespeare, i. 225.

I do not perceive the appositeness of this quotation from Jonson.* In it “Barathrum” undoubtedly means hell. Compare Dekker’s Knights Conjuring, 1607; “In-

* It is incorrectly cited above. In the quarto, 1601, it stands thus;

“Opinion, O God let grosse opinion sinck and be damnd

As deepe as Barathrum.”

Sig. m.

raged at which, he flung away, and leapt into Barathrum.”
Sig. c 3. Taylor’s Worlds Eighth Wonder;

“ Thus all blacke Barathrum is fill’d with games,
With lasting bone-fires, casting sulphur-flames.”
p. 67,—Workes, ed. 1631.

and his Bawd;

“ Cocitus Monarch, high and mighty Dis,
Who of Great Limbo-Lake Commander is,
Of Tartary, of Erebus, and all Those Kingdomes which men Barathrum doe call.”
p. 92 (second),—Ibid.

Act v. sc. 1.

“ Serv. O mistress, mistress, shift and save yourself !
My master and his man are both broke loose,
Beaten the maids a-row, and bound the doctor,
Whose beard they have sing’d off with brands of fire;
And, ever as it blaz’d, they threw on him
Great pails of puddled mire to quench the hair :
My master preaches patience to him, and the while
His man with scissors nicks him like a fool.

* * * * *

Mistress, upon my life, I tell you true;
I have not breath’d almost, since I did see it.
He cries for you, and vows, if he can take you,
To scorch your face, and to disfigure you.”

Warburton saw that, in the last line, the true reading was “scotch;” but this obvious emendation has been treated with contempt by his successors. “ ‘Scorch,’ says Steevens, “ I believe, is right. He would have punished her as he had punished the conjurer before ;” — which must have been by singing off her beard!—The folio has the very same misprint in Macbeth, act iii. sc. 2;

“We have scorch'd [read “scotch'd”] the snake, not kill'd it.”

So, too, have all the old editions of Beaumont and Fletcher's Knight of the Burning Pestle, act iii. sc. 4; “Re-enter GEORGE, leading a second Man, with a patch over his nose.

George. Puissant Knight, of the Burning Pestle hight,
See here another wretch, whom this foul beast
Hath scorcht [read “scotch'd”] and scor'd in this inhuman wise!”

Act v. sc. 1.

“I think, you all have drunk of Circe's cup.”

Malone writes; “The Duke means to say, I think you all are out of your senses; so below;—

‘I think you are all mated, or stark mad.’

Circe's potion, however, though it transformed the companions of Ulysses into swine, and deprived them of speech, did not, it should seem, deprive them of their reason; for Homer tells us that they lamented their transformation. However, the Duke's words are sufficiently intelligible, if we consider them as meaning—Methinks you all are become as irrational as beasts.”

But Malone forgets Virgil; who evidently meant us to understand that those whom Circe had transformed were “deprived of reason;”

“Hinc exaudiri gemitus iræque leonum,
Vincta recusantum, et sera sub nocte rudentum;

Setigerique sues, atque in præsepibus ursi
 Sævire, ac formæ magnorum ululare luporum.”
Æn. vii. 15.

“Resembling those Grecians, that, with Vlysses, drinking of Circes drugges, lost both forme and memorie.”
 Greene’s Newer too late, sig. G 4, ed. 1611.

Act v. sc. 1.

“The following lines,” says Mr. Collier, “as they are printed in the folio, 1623, have been the source of considerable cavil:

‘Thirty-three years have I but gone in travail
 Of you, my sons, and till this present hour
 My heavy burden are delivered.’

That the above is corrupt there can be no question; and in the folio, 1632, the printer attempted thus to amend the passage:—

‘Thirty-three years have I been gone in travail
 Of you, my sons; and till this present hour
 My heavy burdens are delivered.’

Malone gave it thus:—

‘Twenty-five years have I but gone in travail
 Of you, my sons; until this present hour
 My heavy burden not delivered.’

The manuscript-corrector of the folio, 1632, makes the slightest possible change in the second line, and at once removes the whole difficulty: he puts it,—

'Thirty-three years have I been gone in travail
Of you, my sons, and at this present hour
My heavy burdens are delivered.'

Notes and Emendations, &c. p. 64.

I cannot think, with Mr. Collier, that, when the Manuscript-corrector alters "till" to "at," he "makes the slightest possible change." The utter improbability that "at" should have been mistaken for "till" either by scribe or compositor, strongly warrants the belief that the latter word was really the poet's: and I must be allowed to repeat here what I formerly advanced in my Remarks on Collier's and Knight's eds. of Shakespeare, viz.;—"I have little doubt that the genuine text is,—

'and till this present hour
My heavy burden ne'er delivered.'

Our early printers sometimes mistook 'ne'er' (written nere) for are." p. 30.

With respect to the first line of the passage, as it is given above with the imprimatur of the Manuscript-corrector,—

"Thirty-three years have I been gone in travail,"—

Mr. Collier can hardly mean that "Thirty-three" is right, because the Manuscript-corrector has allowed that number to stand (see Theobald's note, or Mr. Collier's own note, ad l.); and surely we may more than suspect that "been" was arbitrarily substituted for "but" by the editor or printer of the second folio.

MUCH ADO ABOUT NOTHING.

Act i. sc. 1.

The quarto and the folio have "Enter Leonato, governor of Messina, Innogen his wife," &c. (and again at the commencement of Act ii. they make "his wife" enter with Leonato.) "It is therefore clear," says Mr. Collier ad l., "that the mother of Hero made her appearance before the audience, although she says nothing throughout the comedy;" and the same gentleman, in his Notes and Emendations, &c., remarks, that "the manuscript-corrector of the folio, 1632, has expunged the words Innogen, his wife, as if the practice had not then been for her to appear before the audience in this or in any other portion of the comedy." p. 66.

The great probability is, that she never appeared before any audience in any part of the play, and that Theobald was right when he conjectured that "the poet had in his first plan designed such a character, which, on a survey of it, he found would be superfluous, and therefore he left it out." One thing I hold for certain, viz. that, if she ever did figure among the dramatis personæ, it was not as a mere dummy: there are scenes in which the mother of Hero must have spoken;—she could not have stood on the stage without a word to say about the disgrace of her daughter, &c.

Act i. sc. 1.

"Leon. How many gentlemen have you lost in this action?"

"Mess. But few of any sort, and none of name."

According to Monck Mason, "of any sort" means—of any kind whatsoever; an interpretation which, though manifestly wrong, has found approvers. The reply of the Messenger is equivalent to—But few gentlemen of any rank, and none of celebrity. So presently he says to Beatrice, "I know none of that name, lady; there was none such in the army of any sort." So, too, in Midsummer-Night's Dream, act iii. sc. 2;

"none of noble sort Would so offend a virgin:"

and in Jonson's Every Man in his Humour,—Works, i. 24, ed. Gifford; "A gentleman of your sort, parts," &c.: and in A Warning for Faire Women, 1599;

"The Queene our mistris
Allows this bounty to all commers, much more
To gentlemen of your sort."

Sig. f 2.

Act i. sc. 1.

"or do you play the flouting Jack, to tell us Cupid is a good hare-finder, and Vulcan a rare carpenter?"

Mr. Knight prints "from two correspondents" an explanation of this passage,—which explanation he has no doubt is the right one. I am inclined to think so too. But it was given long ago by Tollet.

Act i. sc. 1.

"Bene. Like the old tale, my lord: it is not so, nor 'twas not so; but indeed God forbid it should be so."

Blakeway (see the Varior. Shakespeare) has preserved, from the relation of his "great aunt," a very curious story, which may really be a modernised version of "the old tale" here alluded to: but he was not aware that one of the circumstances in the good lady's narrative is borrowed from Spenser's Faerie Queene;

"When she arrived at the house, and knocked at the door, no one answered. At length she opened it, and went in. Over the portal of the hall was written, Be bold, be bold, but not too bold: she advanced. Over the staircase, the same inscription: she went up. Over the entrance of a gallery, the same: she proceeded. Over the door of a chamber, Be bold, be bold, but not too bold, lest that your heart's-blood should run cold," &c. Blakeway's Tale.

"And, as she lookt about, she did behold
How over that same dore was likewise writ,
Be bolde, be bolde, and every where, Be bold;
That much she muz'd, yet could not construe it
By any ridling skill or commune wit.
At last she spyde at that rowmes upper end
Another yron dore, on which was writ,
Be not too bold; whereto though she did bend
Her earnest minde, yet wist not what it might intend."

The Faerie Queene, B. iii. C. xi. st. 54.

Act i. sc. 1.

"D. Pedro. Nay, if Cupid have not spent all his quiver in Venice, thou wilt quake for this shortly."

Long before this comedy was produced, various writers had characterised Venice as the place where Cupid "reigns and revels." So Greene; "Hearing that of all the citties in Europe, Venice hath most semblance of Venus vanities Because therefore this great city of Venice is holden Loues Paradice," &c. Newer too late, sig. q 2, ed. 1611. —At a somewhat later period, Coryat's Crudities made the Venetian courtesans well known in England.

Act i. sc. 1.

"Bene. I have almost matter enough in me for such an embassage; and so I commit you—

Claud. To the tuition of God: From my house (if I had it)—"

There is the same sort of joke in the translation of the Menæchmi, 1595, by W. W. [William Warner?];

"Men. What, mine owne Peniculus?

Pen. Yours (ifaith), bodie and goods, if I had any."

Sig. B.

Act i. sc. 3.

"What is he for a fool that betroths himself to unquietness?"

I have elsewhere observed (Remarks on Collier's and Knight's editions of Shakespeare, p. 32) that "What is he for a fool" is equivalent to—What manner of fool is he,—What fool is he?—So in Middleton's A Mad World, my Masters; "What is she for a fool would marry thee, a madman?" Works, ii. 421, ed. Dyce. And compare Warner's Syrinx, &c.; "And what art thou for a man that thou shouldst be fastidious of the acquaintance of men?" Sig. q 4, ed. 1597.

Act ii. sc. 1.

"So deliver I up my apes, and away to Saint Peter for the heavens: he shews me where the bachelors sit, and there live we as merry as the day is long."

With the above very erroneous punctuation the passage stands in all the modern editions, except that of Mr. Knight, who properly follows the old copies in pointing it, "—and away to Saint Peter: for the heavens, he shews me," &c. That "for the heavens" is nothing more than a petty oath has been proved by Gifford, Jonson's Works, ii. 68, vi. 333.

Act ii. sc. 1.

"D. Pedro. My visor is Philemon's roof; within the house is Jove.

Hero. Why, then your visor should be thatch'd.

D. Pedro. Speak low, if you speak love."

"Perhaps," says Blakeway, "the author meant here to introduce two of the long fourteen-syllable verses so common among our early dramatists, and the measure of Golding's translation [of Ovid]." Nobody, I should suppose, that has eyes and ears, could doubt it. But are the lines Shakespeare's own, or taken (at least partly) from some poem of the time which has perished? To me they read like a quotation.

Act ii. sc. 1.

"Bene. Well, I would you did like me!

F

Marg. So would not I, for your own sake; for I have many ill qualities.

Bene. Which is one?

Marg. I say my prayers aloud.

Bene. I love you the better; the hearers may cry, Amen.

Marg. God match me with a good dancer!

Balth. Amen.

Marg. And God keep him out of my sight, when the dance is done!—Answer, clerk.

Balth. No more words: the clerk is answered."

From a note in Mr. Knight's edition I learn that Tieck would give to Balthazar all the speeches in the above dialogue which are now assigned to Benedick; and several years before seeing that note, I had made, in my copy of the Variorum Shakespeare, the alteration which the German critic proposes. Mr. Knight remarks that, though Tieck is probably right, "still Benedick may first address Margaret, and then pass on, leaving Balthazar with her." I cannot think so. Benedick is now engaged with Beatrice, as is evident from what they presently say. Besides, —is not the effect of the scene considerably weakened,* if Benedick enters into conversation with any other woman except Beatrice?

Two prefixes, each beginning with the same letter, are frequently confounded by transcribers and printers: so, in Love's Labour's lost, act ii. sc. 1, six speeches in succession which belong to Biron are assigned in the folio to Boyet.

* Shortly before his death, Mr. Kenney the dramatist told me, that, having spent much time in examining each play of Shakespeare, scene by scene, merely with a view to ascertain what were its merits in point of construction, distribution of the dialogue, stage-effectiveness, &c., he had come to the conclusion that Shakespeare, even in the veriest minutiae, was a consummate artist.

Indeed, we sometimes find in old plays such mistakes in the prefixes as it is impossible to account for: of this we have an instance in the present comedy, towards the close of which, the words, "Peace, I will stop your mouth,"—words that indubitably belong to Benedick,—are assigned, both in the quarto and in the folio, to Leonato.

Act ii. sc. 1.

"but civil, count, civil as an orange."

It may be noticed that a "civil (not a Seville) orange" was the orthography of the time. See Cotgrave's Dict. in "Aigre-douce" and in "Orange."

Act ii. sc. 3.

"Enter BENEDICK and a Boy."

Mr. Collier (ad l.) observes; "In the old copies Benedick enters 'alone' before the boy makes his appearance; and the reason is obvious, for Benedick should ruminate, and pace to and fro, before he calls the boy. In all the modern editions 'Benedick and a Boy' enter together: a very injudicious arrangement." Mr. Collier has accordingly given the opening of the scene thus;

"Enter BENEDICK.

Bene. Boy!

Enter a Boy.

Boy. Signior:"—

but probably, when Mr. Collier reprints his Shakespeare, he will acquiesce in the modern arrangement, since the Manuscript-corrector of the folio, 1632, has added to the entrance of Benedick, "Boy following."—The truth is, the entrances of "such small deer" as Pages are frequently omitted in the old copies of plays. Compare Dekker's Match me in London, 1631, where a scene commences thus;

"Enter Don John.

Joh. Boy !

Pach. My lord ?" &c.

p. 54 [55],—the entrance of the page Pacheco not being marked.

Act iii. sc. 2.

"he hath twice or thrice cut Cupid's bow-string, and the little hangman dare not shoot at him."

Farmer says that this character of Cupid is from Sidney's Arcadia (B. ii. p. 156, ed. 1598), where we are told that Jove appointed Cupid

"In this our world a hangman for to be
Of all those fooles that will have all they see."

Perhaps so. But I suspect that "hangman" is here equivalent to—rascal, rogue. (In Johnson's Dict. sub "Hangman," the present passage is cited to exemplify the word employed as a term of reproach.) It is at least certain that hangman, having come to signify an executioner in general—(so in Fletcher's Prophetess, act iii. sc. 1, Dioclesian, who had stabbed Aper, is called "the hangman of Volusius Aper;" and in Jacke Drums Entertainment, Brabant Junior, being prevented by Sir Edward from stabbing himself, declares that he is too wicked to live,—

“And therefore, gentle knight, let mine owne hand
Be mine own hangman.”

Sig. H 3, ed. 1616)—

was afterwards used as a general term of reproach (so in Guy Earl of Warwick, a Tragedy, printed in 1661, but acted much earlier; “Faith, I doubt you are some lying hangman,” i. e. rascal).

Act v. sc. 1.

“And made a push at chance and sufferance.”

This passage was misunderstood, till Mr. Collier explained “push” to be an interjection (a form of pish),—referring to some of my editions for examples of its use. I subjoin two others;

“Pem. Deare friend—

Fer. Push, meet me.”

The Tryall of Cheualry, 1605, sig. c 4.

“Grac. But I prithee practise some milder behauour at the ordinarie, be not al madman.

Acut. Push, ile bee all obseruatiue,” &c.

Everie Woman in her Humor, 1609, sig. E 2.

I may add;

“Well, jest on, gallants; and, vncke, you that make a pish at the Black Art,” &c.

Day's Law Trickes, 1608, sig. I 2.

Act v. sc. 1.

"Scambling, out-facing, fashion-mong'ring boys."

Here Mr. Knight, alone of the modern editors, follows the old copies in printing "fashion-monging,"—and rightly, for instances of that form are not wanting in our early authors: so in Wilson's Coblers Prophecie, 1594;

"Then where will be the schollers allegories,
Where the Lawier with his dilatories,
Where the Courtier with his brauerie,
And the money-monging mate with all his knauerie?"

Sig. B 8.

Act v. sc. 1.

"I will bid thee draw, as we do the minstrels."

"As we bid the minstrels" means, according to Malone, "draw the bows of their fiddles;" according to Mr. Collier, "draw their instruments out of their cases." The latter seems the more probable explanation: compare Dekker's Satiromastix, 1602; "Haue the merry knaues pul'd their fiddle cases ouer their instruments eares?" Sig. B 2.

Act v. sc. 1.

"Dog. Come, you, sir; if justice cannot tame you, she shall ne'er weigh more reasons in her balance."

This quibble between reasons and raisins is found again in Troilus and Cressida, act ii. sc. 2. Indeed, it is as old as the time of Skelton, who says in his Speke, Parrot;

"Grete reysons with resons be now reprobitante,
For reysons ar no resons, but resons currant."

Works, ii. 22, ed. Dyce (where these lines were for the first time printed).

See also Dekker's Owles Almanacke, 1618, sig. F 2.

Act v. sc. 2.

"I give thee the bucklers,"

i. e. I yield, lay aside all thoughts of defence. So Cotgrave, in his Dict. (sub Gaigné), has "Je te le donne gaigné I giue thee the bucklers."

Act v. sc. 2.

"Yonder's old coil at home."

That, in such expressions, "old" is equivalent to "great, abundant," was never doubted, I suppose, by any one except the critic who reviewed my ed. of Beaumont and Fletcher in Churton's Literary Register.—Cotgrave, in his Dict., has; "Faire le diable de vauuert. To play reaks, to keep an old coile, or horrible stirre." I know not if it has been observed that the Italians use (or at least formerly used) "vecchio" in the same sense;

"Perchè Corante abbandonava il freno,
E dette un vecchio colpo in sul terreno."

Pulci,—Morg. Mag. c. xv. st. 54.

"E so ch' egli ebbe di vecchie paure."

Id. c. xix. st. 30.

(It is rather remarkable that Florio, in his Dict., has not given this meaning of "vecchio.")

LOVE'S LABOUR'S LOST.

Act i. sc. 1.

"King. Well, sit you out: go home, Biron, adieu."

In his note on these words Mr. Collier says, "The folio has 'fit you out,' which may be right." Assuredly not: and, if the passage cited by Steevens from Bishop Sanderson be thought insufficient to shew that the quarto gives the true reading, here is another passage which puts the matter beyond all doubt;

"Lewis.

King of Nauar, will onely you sit out?

Nau. No, King of Fraunce, my bloud's as hot as thine,
And this my weapon shall confirme my words."

The Tryall of Cheualry, 1605, sig. g 3.

Act i. sc. 1.

"Biron. How low soever the matter, I hope in God for high words.

Long. A high hope for a low having: God grant us patience!

Biron. To hear, or forbear hearing?

Long. To hear meekly, sir, and to laugh moderately; or to forbear both."

In this passage the old eds. give "A high hope for a low heaven." Theobald (whose alteration has generally been adopted) substituted "having" for "heaven."

From Mr. Collier's Notes and Emendations, p. 82, we learn that "the corrector of the folio, 1632, says that we ought to erase 'heaven' for hearing :—

'A high hope for a low hearing: God grant us patience!'

What Biron adds seems consequent upon it, when he asks whether the patience prayed for is to be granted, 'to hear, or to forbear hearing.'

I shall not discuss the question whether Theobald's "having" be right or wrong (Mr. Collier, in his edition of Shakespeare, says, Theobald "was probably right;" in the Notes and Emendations he says, Theobald "was most likely wrong"). As to the Manuscript-corrector's emendation, "hearing,"—I strongly suspect that it was made merely in consequence of his finding that word in the next speech. But is "hearing" the right reading in Biron's speech? No; it is manifestly wrong: what immediately follows proves that it is a mistake of the scribe or the printer for "laughing,"—the excellent correction of Steevens, which Malone calls "plausible," and which the later editors do not even mention.

Act i. sc. 1.

"Biron. Well, sir, be it as the style shall give us cause to climb in the merriness."

"The manuscript-corrector has altered 'clime in the merriness' of the old copies, to 'chime in in the merriness,' in allusion to the laughable contents expected in Armado's letter, 'in the merriness' of which the King and his companions hope to 'chime in' or participate." Collier's Notes and Emendations, &c. p. 82.

G

But we can hardly doubt that on the word "style" a quibble was intended, which is destroyed by the Manuscript-corrector's alteration. Compare, in act iv. sc. 1,— "Boyet. I am much deceiv'd, but I remember the style.

Prin. Else your memory is bad, going o'er it erewhile."

So also, in Dekker's Satiro-mastix, 1602, Asinius Bubo, who has been reading a book, says of its author, "The whoorson made me meete with a hard stile in two or three places as I went ouer him." Sig. c 4. And in Day's Ile of Guls, 1606; "But and you vsde such a high and eleuate stile, your auditories low and humble vnderstandings should neuer crall ouer't." Sig. f.

Act ii. sc. 1.

"Now, madam, summon up your dearest spirits."

"To this line," says Mr. Collier (Notes and Emendations, &c. p. 83), "Steevens has appended a note in which he observes, that 'Dear, in our author's language, has many shades of meaning: in the present instance and the next, it appears to signify, best, most powerful.' The fact is (if we may trust the corrector of the folio, 1632) that 'dearest' was a misprint for clearest; and it is easy to see how cl might be mistaken for d. He gives the line:—

'Now, madam, summon up your clearest spirits;'

that is, her brightest and purest spirits, that the Princess might adequately discharge the important embassy entrusted to her by her father."

But we are not to "trust the corrector of the folio, 1632," when he rashly alters "dearest" to "clearest" only because, during his time, the former word had become rather obsolete in the sense which it bears here. That "dearest" is the true lection, and that Steevens explained it rightly, we have proof (if proof were required) in a line of Dekker, who applies to "spirits" an epithet synonymous with "dearest,"

"Call vp your lustiest spirits; the lady's come."

If it be not good, the Duel is in it, 1612, sig. c 3.

Act ii. sc. 1.

"Ros. No point, with my knife."

The double negative of the French, with a quibble. (It occurs again in act v. sc. 2.) We occasionally meet with it in passages of our old plays where no quibble is intended. So in Jack Drums Entertainment;

"I will helpe you to a wench, Mounsieur.

Moun. No point, a burne childe feere de fire."

Sig. c. ed. 1616.

and in The Wisdome of Doctor Dodypoll, 1600; "Vat, you go leave a de bride? tis no point good fashion." Sig. d 2: and sometimes we find it when the speakers are Englishmen.

Act ii. sc. 1.

"His tongue, all impatient to speak and not see,
Did stumble with haste in his eye-sight to be;
All senses to that sense did make their repair,
To feel only looking on fairest of fair."

On the first line of this passage the following notes are found in the Variorum Shakespeare:—

“That is—his tongue being impatiently desirous to see as well as speak.” JOHNSON.

“Although the expression in the text is extremely odd, I take the sense of it to be, that—his tongue envied the quickness of his eyes, and strove to be as rapid in its utterance, as they in their perception. Edinburgh Magazine, Nov. 1786.” STEEVENS.

Now, it would be difficult to say which of these notes is least to the purpose. The context distinctly shews that the meaning is—His tongue, not able to endure the having merely the power of speaking without that of seeing.

Again, on the fourth line we find, ibid.:—

“Perhaps we may better read: ‘To feed only by looking.’” JOHNSON.

There is no necessity for any alteration. The meaning is—That they might have no feeling but that of looking, &c.

Act iii. sc. 1.

“Arm. How hast thou purchased this experience?”

“Moth. By my penny of observation.”

The old eds. have “penne of observation.” Hanmer, whose reading has been adopted by all later editors, altered “penne” to “penny.”—But the manuscript-corrector of the folio, 1632, reads, “By my pain of observation,”—that is, says Mr. Collier (Notes and Emendations, &c. p. 85), “by the pains he had taken in observing the characters of men and women. What most militates against this alteration is the figurative use of the word ‘purchased,’ for obtained, by Armado." Instead of "What most militates against this alteration," Mr. Collier ought to have said, "What utterly annihilates this alteration."

Act iii. sc. 1.

"Dread prince of plackets."

Concerning "placket," see Steevens's Amnerian note on King Lear, act iii. sc. 4; and Dict. of Arch. and Prov. Words, by Mr. Halliwell; who observes; "Nares, Dyce, and other writers, tell us a placket generally signifies a petticoat, but their quotations do not bear out this opinion." I still think that in the quotations referred to, as well as in the present passage, "placket" is equivalent to petticoat. A writer of the age of Charles the Second uses "plackets" in the sense of aprons (perhaps of petticoats); "The word Love is a fig-leaf to cover the naked sense, a fashion brought up by Eve, the mother of jilts: she cuckolded her husband with the Serpent, then pretended to modesty, and fell a making plackets presently." Crowne's Sir Courtly Nice, act ii. p. 13, ed. 1685.

Act iv. sc. 1.

"A stand where you may make the fairest shoot.

Prin. I thank my beauty, I am fair that shoot,
And thereupon thou speak'st the fairest shoot.

* * * * Not fair? alack for woe!

For. Yes, madam, fair.

Prin. Nay, never paint me now:
Where fair is not, praise cannot mend the brow.

* * * * *

Fair payment for foul words is more than due.

For. Nothing but fair is that which you inherit.

Prin. See, see ! my beauty will be sav'd by merit.

O, heresy in fair, fit for these days!

A giving hand, though foul, shall have fair praise."

"The corrector of the folio, 1632, has it,—

'O, heresy in faith, fit for these days' which is probably right, although Shakespeare, like many other poets of his time, uses 'fair' for fairness or beauty." Collier's Notes and Emendations, &c. p. 87.

Surely the context proves the Manuscript-corrector to be altogether wrong. Here *fair is, of course, equivalent to—beauty; in which sense Milton (though his editors do not notice it) uses the word in Paradise Lost;

"no fair to thine

Equivalent or second."

Book ix. 608.

Act iv. sc. 2.

"Dull. If a talent be a claw, look how he claws him with a talent."

To the examples of talent used for talon the following may be added.

"Or buying armes of the herald, who giues them the

* Incredible as it may seem, the reviewer of my ed. of Beaumont and Fletcher, in a periodical called Churton's Literary Register, denied that fair ever meant—beauty. The following couplet in Sylvester's Du Bartas would be alone sufficient to determine that it did :

"Causing her sit in a rich easie chaire, Himselfe, at ease, views and reviews her faire" [the original having "ses diuines beautés"]. Bethulia's Rescue, p. 502, ed. 1641.

Lion without tongue, taile, or talents." Nash's Pierce Pennilesse his Supplication, sig. F 4, ed. 1595.

"The Griffin halfe a bird, and halfe a beast, Strong-arm'd with mightie beak, talents, and creast."

Baxter's Sir P. Sidneys Ourania, 1606, sig. H.

"A second Phœnix rise, of larger wing,
Of stronger talent, of more dreadfull beake," &c.

Dekker's Whore of Babylon, 1607, sig. F 2.

Act iv. sc. 3.

"Biron [aside]. O rhymes are gards on wanton Cupid's hose; Disfigure not his shape."

So Mr. Collier in his edition of Shakespeare (from a ms. correction in Lord Ellesmere's copy of the first folio) for the misprint of the old copies, "shop."

"A question has been agitated whether we ought to read shape or slop. Theobald was in favour of slop, and his conjecture is confirmed by the corrector of the folio, 1632." Notes and Emendations, &c. p. 89.

I nevertheless am inclined to think that the right reading is "shape;" in the first place, because the poet would hardly have used the word slop immediately after hose; and secondly because, in Fletcher's Beggars' Bush, act v. sc. 1, the first folio has,—

"who assur'd me, Florio

Liv'd in some merchant's shop,"—

a misprint which, in the second folio, is properly altered to "shape."

(Shape was often anciently spelt shap,—a form occasionally found even in mss. of Shakespeare's time: hence the greater probability of the word being mistaken by a compositor for shop.)

Act v. sc. 1.

"For what is inward between us, let it pass:—I do beseech thee, remember thy courtesy;—I beseech thee, apparel thy head."

So the passage is given in all copies ancient and modern. Malone saw that the addition of the word "not" was absolutely necessary for the sense; and yet he did not venture to introduce it into the text! Nothing can be more evident than that Shakespeare wrote, "remember not thy courtesy." Holofernes had taken off his hat; and Armado condescendingly says,—Don't stand on courtesy, apparel thy head.

Act v. sc. 2.

"A lady wall'd about with diamonds!"

It may be noticed that Marlowe, in his Dido, had made Ganymede describe himself as "wall'd in with eagle's wings." Works, ii. 366, ed. Dyce.

Act v. sc. 2.

"Ros. 'Ware pencils! How? let me not die your debtor," &c.

So the line stands in all editions.

I have no doubt that we ought to print, "'Ware pencils, ho!"—the "how" of the early copies being merely the old spelling of "ho." It would be easy to adduce many instances of that spelling. So, in the last scene of The Taming of a Shrew, ed. 1594, the Tapster, finding Sly asleep, calls out, "What how [i. e. ho], Slie! awake for shame" (which in the later eds. is erroneously altered to "What now," &c.). So too in The History of Stukeley, 1605,

"Are the gates shut alreadie? open how [i. e. ho!]."

Sig. E 3.

and afterwards, "Some water, water howe [i. e. ho!]." Sig. L.

See also my remarks on Anthony and Cleopatra, act i. sc. 2, in this volume.

In the present passage "ho" is, of course, equivalent to cease, stop,—a meaning which formerly it often bore.

Act v. sc. 2.

"King. Farewell, mad wenches: you have simple wits.

Prin. Twenty adieus, my frozen Muscovites.

Exeunt King, Lords, &c."

So the modern editors. But they ought to have followed the old copies, which here (and here only) have, for the sake of exact rhyme, "Muscovits."

Those who are well read in our early poets will recollect the strange liberties which some of them take with words when a rhyme is required.

Act v. sc. 2.

"Biron. This jest is dry to me.—Fair, gentle sweet,
Your wit makes wise things foolish."

H

"Fair" (which Malone altered to "My," and which Mr. Knight rejects) is adopted from the second folio by Mr. Collier; and in all probability it was the word here used by Shakespeare. So in Day's Law-Trickes, 1608, we find, "God saue, faire sweete." Sig. B 4.

Act v. sc. 2.

"Judas was hang'd on an elder."

See Marlowe's Jew of Malta (and note), Works, i. 329, ed. Dyce.

Pulci has;

"Era di sopra a la fonte un carrubbio,
L' arbor, si dice, ove s' impiccò Giuda," &c.

Morgante Mag. c. xxv. st. 77.

Act v. sc. 2.

"King. The extreme parts of time extremely form
[the quarto and the folio "formes"]

All causes to the purpose of his speed;

And often, at his very loose, decides

That which long process could not arbitrate."

"The passage," observes Mr. Collier, "is corrupt, and the manuscript alteration made in the folio, 1632, thus sets it right, and renders the sense distinct;

'The extreme parting time expressly forms
All causes,' &c."

Notes and Emendations, &c. p. 96.

The Manuscript-corrector's alteration is ingenious: that it restores the original reading, I am far from convinced.

Strange to say, the commentators seem to have been puzzled by the word "loose." The only note on that word in the Variorum Shakespeare is the following one;

"At his very loose may mean at the moment of his parting, i. e. of his getting loose, or away from us. So, in some ancient poem, of which I forgot to preserve either the date or title [the poem is Drayton's Fifth Eglogue, p. 449, ed. 1619];

'Envy discharging all her pois'nous [poys'ned] darts,
The valiant mind is temper'd with that fire,
At her fierce loose that weakly never parts [starts],
But in despite doth force her to retire.'

STEEVENS.

Loose is properly the act of discharging an arrow; "the archers terme, who is not said to finish the feate of his shot before he giue the loose, and deliuer his arrow from his bow." Puttenham's Arte of English Poesie, 1589, p. 145. Compare A Warning for Faire Women, 1599;

"Twice, as you see, this sad distressed man,
The onely marke whereat foule Murther shot,
Just in the loose of enuious eager Death,
By accidents strange and miraculous,
Escap't the arrow aymed at his hart."

Sig. E 3.

and Beaumont and Fletcher's Cupid's Revenge;

"But he shall know ere long that my smart loose
Can thaw ice, and inflame the wither'd heart Of Nestor."

Act ii. sc. 1.

In a famous passage of Midsummer-Night's Dream we have the verb,—“loos'd” (on which the commentators give no note);

“ And loos'd his love-shaft smartly from his bow,
As it should pierce a hundred thousand hearts.”

Act ii. sc. 2.

“ Descocher une fleiche. To shoote, loosse, or send an arrow from a bow.” Cotgrave's Dict.

A MIDSUMMER-NIGHT'S DREAM.

Act i. sc. 2.

"I could play Ercles rarely, or a part to tear a cat in, to make all split."

The expression "make all split," and the similar one, "let all split," are often met with in early writers.—It has not, I believe, been remarked that they are properly nautical phrases: "He set downe this period with such a sigh, that, as the Marriners say, a man would haue thought al would have split againe." Greene's Neuer too late, sig. G 3, ed. 1611.

Act ii. sc. 1.

"The cowslips tall her pensioners be;
In their gold coats spots you see," &c.

The Manuscript-corrector of the folio, 1632, alters "tall" to "all," and "coats" to "cups." See Notes and Emendations, &c. p. 100.

The second of these alterations may be right. But the first is more than questionable; and when Mr. Collier defended it by observing that "cowslips are never 'tall,'" he ought to have considered, that, however diminutive they may appear to himself, as he gathers them in those sylvan scenes to which (unfortunately for his friends and acquaintances) he has now withdrawn, they might nevertheless seem "tall" to Titania and her elves in the Athenian forest; just as the tulip was "lofty" to certain other fairies, who held their revels in Kensington Gardens, before nature (or rather art) had produced people of fashion;

"Beneath a lofty tulip's ample shade
Sat the young lover and th' immortal maid."*

In a note on the present passage of Shakespeare, the following stanza from Drayton's Nymphidia is not inaptly cited by Johnson;

"And for the Queen a fitting bower,
Quoth he, is that fair cowslip-flower,
On Hipcut-hill that groweth;
In all your train there's not a fay
That ever went to gather May,
But she hath made it in her way
The tallest there that groweth."

Act iv. sc. 1.

"Her dotage now I do begin to pity;
For meeting her of late, behind the wood,
Seeking sweet savours for this hateful fool," &c.

So Malone, Mr. Knight, and Mr. Collier, read with the folio and Roberts's quarto. The other quarto has "favours;" which (though Mr. Collier says "'savours' seems preferable") I think decidedly right. Titania was seeking flowers for Bottom to wear as favours: compare Greene; "These [fair women] with syren-like allurements so entised these quaint squires, that they bestowed all their flowers vpon them for favours." Quip for an Vpstart Courtier, sig. B 2, ed. 1620.

* Tickell's Kensington Gardens.

THE MERCHANT OF VENICE.

Act ii. sc. 5.

"Fast bind, fast find ;A proverb never stale in thrifty mind."

"The proverb with which the speech ends is given [by the Manuscript-corrector of the folio, 1632] differently both from quartos and folios; for instead of 'Fast bind, fast find,' we have 'Safe bind, Safe find.'" Collier's Notes and Emendations, &c. p. 115.

The Manuscript-corrector seems to have made the change "for variation's sake."—Compare Cotgrave's Dict. sub Bon. "Bon guet chasse malaventure: Pro. Good watch preuents misfortune; fast bind, fast find, say we."

Act ii. sc. 9.

"Enter a Messenger.Mess. Where is my lady?Por. Here: what would my lord?"

Mr. Collier, in his ed. of Shakespeare, having observed, "It is clear that he [the Messenger] was not a mere servant, not only from the language put into his mouth, but because, when he asks, 'Where is my lady?' Portia replies, 'Here; what would my lord?' The Messenger was a person of rank attending on Portia,"—I maintained that the reply of Portia was nothing more than a sportive rejoinder to the abrupt exclamation of the Messenger, and I cited similar passages from Shakespeare's First Part of Henry IV. act ii. sc. 4, and from his Richard II. act v. sc. 5 (Remarks on Collier's and Knight's editions of Shakespeare, p. 55). I have since found the same sort of pleasantries in another dramatist;

"Enter Peter with a candle.

Pe. Where are you, my Lord?

Hog. Here, my Lady."

The Hogge hath lost his Pearle, by R. Tailor, 1614, sig. H.

Act iii. sc. 1.

"it was my turquoise."

"Men," says Greene, "weare not jems onely to please the sight, but to be defensiuies by their secret operations against perils." Farewell to Follie, sig. B 2, ed. 1617: and Steevens's note has made it plain that Shylock valued his turquoise, not only as being the gift of Leah, but on account of the imaginary virtues ascribed to the stone. The following lines of Donne may be added to Steevens's illustrations of the passage;

"As a compassionate Turcoyse, which doth tell,

By looking pale, the wearer is not well."

Anat. of the World,—Poems, p. 247, ed. 1633.

Act v. sc. 1.

"look, how the floor of heaven

Is thick inlaid with patterns of bright gold."

So Mr. Collier in his Shakespeare, adopting the reading of the second folio. That of the first folio, and of Heyes's quarto, is "pattens." The other quarto has "pat-tents."

Though Mr. Hunter (New Illustr. of Shakespeare, i. 318) says, that "the constellations may not unsuitably be spoken of as patterns, just as we speak of the pattern of mosaic work, or the pattern of a flowered or spotted damask," I still think (see my Remarks on Collier's and Knight's editions of Shakespeare, p. 59) that "patterns" is a gross misprint, and that we must undoubtedly read "patines," or "pattens," or "pattents" (it matters little which; see Coles's English-Latin Dict. in "Patine;" Todd's Johnson's Dict. in "Paten;" and, for an example of "pattent," Hunter's New Illust. of Shakespeare, ii. 349).

The poet means that the floor of heaven is thickly in-laid with plates, or circular ornaments, of bright gold. Compare Sylvester's Du Bartas;

"Th' Almightyes finger fixed many a million
Of golden scutchions [the original has "platines dorees"] in that rich pavillion."

The Fourth Day of the First Week, p. 33, ed. 1641.

"That sumptuous canapy,
The which th' un-niggard hand of Majesty
Poudred so thick with shields [the original has "escussions"] so shining cleer," &c.

Id. p. 34.

Act v. sc. 1.

"the moon sleeps with Endymion."

The very same words occur in a writer with whose works Shakespeare, we know, was well acquainted ;

“ The moon sleeps with Endymion every day.”

Marlowe's Ovid's Elegies,—Works, iii. 136, ed. Dyce.

AS YOU LIKE IT.

Act iii. sc. 5.

“The common executioner,
Whose heart th’ accustom’d sight of death makes hard,
Falls not the axe upon the humbled neck,
But first begs pardon: will you sterner be
Than he that dies and lives by bloody drops?”

“Perhaps ‘dies’ is to be taken in the sense of causes to die; but the corrector of the folio, 1632, removes all doubt, if we may take his representation of the original text, by substituting kills. . . . Can dines have been the true word?” Collier’s Notes and Emendations, &c. p. 134.

The old text must be right, because “dies” is evidently put in opposition to “lives;” and the Manuscript-corrector’s alteration must be wrong, because it destroys the antithesis.

“I am afraid,” says Steevens, “our bard is at his quibbles again. To die means as well to dip, a thing in a colour foreign to its own, as to expire. In this sense, contemptible as it is, the executioner may be said to die as well as live by bloody drops :” and he adduces from early writers several instances of quibbles on the word die.

I am strongly inclined to agree with Steevens. In the following passage (which escaped his notice) “dying” seems to be used just as Shakespeare, according to the above explanation, has used “dies” (for we can hardly understand “dying” as equivalent either to the dying of others or to causing to die);

“ Turbine the Dyer stalkes before his dore,
 Like Cæsar, that by Dying oft did thriue;
 And though the Beggar be as proud as poore,
 Yet (like the mortifide) he dyes to liue.”
Davies's Scourge of Folly, 1611, Epig. 273.

Act v. sc. 4.

“ His crown bequeathing to his banish'd brother,
 And all their lands restor'd to him again
 That were with him exil'd.”

So the old copies.

The Manuscript-corrector “ also introduces an emendation into the last line but two of the Second Brother's speech:—

‘ restor'd to them again
 That were with him exil'd.’

The old text is ‘him’ for them, which may by ingenuity be reconciled to propriety; but them makes the passage more easily understood, which here, at least, in the winding up of the plot, must have been a main object with the poet.” Collier's Notes and Emendations, &c. p. 140.

Mr. Collier will excuse me when I say that this is not the only part of his book which is calculated to mislead the reader. Who would not suppose, from the language used above, that the lection “them” was now for the first time brought forward? The fact is, that, Mr. Collier alone excepted, every recent editor has printed “them,” without even thinking it necessary to notice the obvious misprint of the old copies.

THE TAMING OF THE SHREW.

Induction, sc. 1.

"Go by, S. Jeronimy."

"Sly's exclamation from 'The Spanish Tragedy,' 'Go by, S. Jeronimy,' has given commentators some trouble, in consequence of the capital S. before 'Jeronimy.' It seems to be merely a printer's blunder (who might fancy that St. Jerome was alluded to), and so the old corrector treated it, by unceremoniously putting his pen through it." Collier's Notes and Emendations, &c. p. 141.

But is the Manuscript-corrector to be justified in treating the "S." so unceremoniously? See my Remarks on Collier's and Knight's editions of Shakespeare, p. 65.

Act i. sc. 1.

"Or so devote to Aristotle's checks."

"What are 'Aristotle's checks?' Undoubtedly a misprint for Aristotle's Ethics, formerly spelt ethicks, and hence the absurd blunder" [which the Manuscript-corrector of the folio, 1632, sets right]. Collier's Notes and Emendations, &c. p. 144. See also "Introduction" to that volume, p. xi.

Blackstone conjectured "ethics" many years ago; since which time the whole reading world,—with the exception of Shakespeare's editors,—has been convinced that it is the true lection.

Act iv. sc. 2.

"I spied

An ancient angel coming down the hill."

"The word 'angel' has produced various conjectural emendations, the one usually adopted being that of Theobald, who proposed to read 'ancient engle;' but we are to recollect that the person spoken of was on foot, and we have no doubt that the word wanting [wanted?] is ambler, which we meet with in the margin of the corrected folio, 1632. As to engle or ingle, which means a person of weak understanding, how was Biondello to know that 'the Pendant' was so, by merely seeing him walk down the hill? he could see at once that he was an ambler. How ambler came to be misprinted 'angel' is a difficulty of perpetual recurrence." Collier's Notes and Emendations, &c. p. 151.

I never felt quite satisfied with the emendation "enghle" (ingeniously as it is supported by Gifford, note on B. Jonson's Works, ii. 430); nor does that of the Manuscript-corrector appear to me so certain as it does to Mr. Collier.

After all, is "angel" the right reading (though not in the sense of messenger, which is quite unsuited to the passage),—"an ancient angel" being equivalent to an ancient worthy, or simply to an old fellow? I must not be understood as answering this query in the affirmative when I cite from Cotgrave's Dict. "Angelot à la grosse escaille. An old Angell; and by metaphor, a fellow of th' old, sound, honest, and worthie stamp."

ALL'S WELL THAT ENDS WELL.

Act i. sc. 3.

"Diana, no queen of virgins, that would suffer her poor knight to be surprised, without rescue, in the first assault, or ransom afterward."

The words "Diana, no" and "to be" were supplied by Theobald, and have been adopted by all succeeding editors.

In my Remarks on Collier's and Knight's editions of Shakespeare, p. 69, I cited a passage from Drayton, in support of my assertion that Theobald had unnecessarily introduced the words "to be." That quotation, I understand, has been considered as insufficient to settle the point; and I now subjoin three other passages, which will leave no doubt in the mind of any reader that, according to the phraseology of our early authors, "to be" is a superfluous addition.

"If I in this his regall royall raigne Without repulse should suffer him remaine."

King Carassus,—A Mirrour for Magistrates, p. 188, ed. 1610.

"By which her fruitful vine and wholesome fare
She suffer'd spoil'd, to make a childish snare."

Marlowe's Hero and Leander,—Works, iii. 61, ed. Dyce.

"Least we should be spotted with the staine of ingratitude, in suffering the princesse iniury vnreuenged."
Greene's Penelope's Web, sig. D 3, ed. 1601.

Act ii. sc. 1.

"Hel. What I can do, can do no hurt to try,
 Since you set up your rest 'gainst remedy.
 He that of greatest works is finisher,
 Oft does them by the weakest minister:
 So holy writ in babes hath judgment shown,
 When judges have been babes. Great floods have flown
 From simple sources; and great seas have dried,
 When miracles have by the greatest been denied.
Oft expectation fails, and most oft there
 Where most it promises; and oft it hits,
 Where hope is coldest, and despair most shifts."

In the last line the misprint of the old copies, "shifts," was altered by Pope to "sits." Mr. Collier in his edition of Shakespeare gave "fits," from a manuscript correction in a copy of the first folio belonging to Lord Ellesmere: "fits" is also the reading of the Manuscript-corrector of the folio, 1632; and doubtless the true one.

Mr. Knight puts back into the text the long-discarded "shifts;" and, after telling us that it means "resorts to expedients, depends upon chances, catches at straws,"—he proceeds thus; "Why, then, should not the word stand? A rhyme, it is said, is required to hits. Is it so? Have we a rhyme to this line?—

'Oft expectation fails, and most oft there.'

The couplets are dropped; and we have three lines of blank verse. As well that as one line without a corresponding line." Now, if Mr. Knight had been more familiar with our early dramatists, he would have known that, in such speeches, "one line without a corresponding line" is not unusual, just before the closing couplet. So in The Travailes of the Three Shirleys, 1607, by Day, W. Rowley, and Wilkins;

K

" Good mindes know this, imprisonment's no shame,
Vnlesse the cause be foule which blots the name.
Then all the griefes in my remembrance bee,
Is that my father's eyes should weepe for mee
And my misfortune: for mine owne mishapps
Are to my minde as are heauen's thunder-claps,
Who cleares the ayre of fowle infection,
And in my thoughts do onely publish this,
Affliction's due to man as life and sin is."

Sig. g 4.

Act v. sc. 3.

" Count. Which better than the first, O dear Heaven, bless!
Or, ere they meet, in me, O nature, cesse!"

So the folio. Malone and Mr. Collier print "cease;" and we may well wonder that they should have rejected the older form of the word for one which destroys the rhyme. Mr. Knight rightly retains "cesse," and quotes an instance of it from Chaucer's Troilus and Cressida,—which is going rather too far back: the fact is, Shakespeare found it in various works that were to him of recent date. E. g. in Phaer and Twyne's Æneidos;

" This spoken, with a thought he makes the swelling seas to cesse,
And sunne to shine, and clouds to flee, that did the skies op-presse."

B. I. Sig. b iii. ed. 1584.

TWELFTH-NIGHT.

Act i. sc. 3.

"Sir And. Ay, 'tis strong, and it does indifferent well in a flame-coloured stock."

"Pope was wrong in his change respecting 'flame-colour'd stock:' the old editions have it 'dam'd colour'd stock,' which the manuscript-corrector informs us ought to be 'dun-colour'd stock.'" Collier's Notes and Emendations, &c. p. 172.

But it does not follow that "Pope was wrong," because the Manuscript-corrector hit on an alteration different from his. (When, in a passage of this very play, act ii. sc. 5, "And with what wing the stallion checks at it," the Manuscript-corrector substitutes "falcon" for "stallion," Mr. Collier, I presume, will allow that there at least he is quite "wrong," and that Hanmer, who conjectures "stanniel," is perfectly right.) That Sir Andrew, a gallant of the first water, should ever dream of casing his leg in a "dun-coloured stock," is not to be supposed for a moment.

The epithet "flame-coloured" was frequently applied to dress. In our author's Henry IV. Part First, act i. sc. 2, mention is made of a "wench in flame-coloured taffeta;" in The Enventorey of all the aparell of the Lord Admeralles men, taken the 13th of Marche, 1598, we find, "j flame collerde dublet pynked." Malone's Shakespeare (by Boswell), iii. 315; and in Nabbes's Microcosmus (see the Dram. Pers.) both Fire and Love wear "flame-coloured" habits.

Act iii. sc. 4.

"Oli. I have said too much unto a heart of stone,
And laid mine honour too unchary out."

In this passage "out" is Theobald's correction for "on't" of the old editions,—a correction adopted by all succeeding editors, except Mr. Collier and Mr. Knight.

Mr. Collier's note is; "ON'T] i. e. On the heart of stone: 'bestowed my honour too incautiously on a heart of stone.' Theobald changed 'on't' to out, but without reason." Mr. Knight's is; "Unchary on't. So in the original. The ordinary reading is 'unchary out.' Douce is unwilling, as we are, to disturb the old reading. Olivia has laid her honour too unchary (uncharily) upon a heart of stone."

Though what I say will perhaps carry little weight with Mr. Collier, because I did not happen to exist about the year 1632; and though Mr. Knight is averse to the voice of criticism, whether it proceeds from the living or the dead;—I must yet exclaim against their thrusting back into the text an obvious error of the press.

The misprint of "on't" for "out" is common enough. So the quarto 1640 of Fletcher's Bloody Brother, act iv. sc. 1, has,— "Princes may pick their suffering nobles on't,

And one by one employ them to the block," &c.—

where the other old copies have, as the sense requires, "out." So, too, in Fletcher and Shakespeare's Two Noble Kinsmen, act i. sc. 4, the quarto 1634 has "Y^e are ont of breath," where the second folio (the play is not in the first folio) gives "out."

With the passage of Shakespeare now under consideration compare the following lines by a nameless dramatist ;

"Keepe her from the Serpent, let her not gad
 To euerie Gossips congregation,
 For there is blushing modestie laide out," &c.
Euerie Woman in her Humor, 1609, sig. H 3.

Act v. sc. 1.

"Clo. Marry, sir, lullaby to your bounty, till I come again."

In The Shakespeare Society's Papers, vol. iii. 35, Mr. Halliwell observes that "lullaby is sufficiently unusual as a verb to justify an example;" and he adduces one. Here is another;

"Sweet sound that all mens sences lullabieth."
 Anthony Copley's Fig for Fortune, 1596, p. 59.

Act v. sc. 1.

"Re-enter FABIAN with MALVOLIO."

"When Malvolio is brought upon the scene by Fabian, we meet with a very particular stage-direction, obedience to which must have been intended to produce a ludicrous effect upon the audience: Enter Malvolio, as from prison, with straw about him; in order to show the nature of the confinement to which the poor conceited victim had been subjected." Collier's Notes and Emendations, &c. p. 180.

On the modern stage, Malvolio, in this scene, always enters with some "straw about him;" and such probably has been the invariable custom since the play was first produced. I well remember that, when Twelfth-Night was revived at Edinburgh* many years ago, Terry, who then acted Malvolio (and acted it much better than any one I have since seen in the part) had "straw about him," on his release from durance: nor is the straw omitted by the present representative of Malvolio at the Princess's Theatre.

* That revival is immortalised by Sir W. Scott: "Flora Mac-Ivor bore a most striking resemblance to her brother Fergus; so much so, that they might have played Viola and Sebastian, with the same exquisite effect produced by the appearance of Mrs. Henry Siddons and her brother [William Murray] in those characters." Waverley, vol. i. 317, third ed., 1814.

THE WINTER'S TALE.

Act i. sc. 2.

"Leon. To bide upon't,—thou art not honest ; or,
If thou inclin'st that way," &c.

Here "To bide upon't" is equivalent to—My abiding opinion is. Compare Beaumont and Fletcher's King and No King, act iv. sc. 3 ;

"Captain, thou art a valiant gentleman ;
To abide upon't, a very valiant man :"

and Potts's Discoverie of Witches in the Countie of Lancaster, 1613 ; "the wife of the said Peter then said, to abide upon it, I thinke that my husband will neuer mend," &c. Sig. r 4.

Act iv. sc. 3.

"O Proserpina,
For the flowers now, that, frighted, thou let'st fall.
From Dis's waggon !"

(i. e. Dis's chariot.)

So Barnaby Barnes in his Divils Charter, 1607 (which in all probability preceded The Winter's Tale) ;

"From the pale horror of eternall fire Am I sent with the wagon of blacke Dis," &c.
Sig. n 2.

Act iv. sc. 3.

"Pol. This is the prettiest low-born lass, that ever Ran on the green-sord."

So all the old copies. The modern editors print "green-sward;" but the other was undoubtedly Shakespeare's form of the word. Milton also wrote it "sord;"

"I the midst an altar as the land-mark stood, Rustic, of grassy sord."

Par. Lost, xi. 438.

(where Fenton substituted "sod;" but Newton and Todd restored the old reading.)

And Pope, in one of his earliest pieces, has,—

"So featly tript the light-foot ladies round,
The knights so nimbly o'er the greensword bound," &c.

January and May,—(Tonson's Miscellany, 1709, vol. vi., where it originally appeared).

Coles, in his English-Latin Dict. (sub Sword), gives;
"The green sword, Cespes."

Act v. sc. 3.

"Leon.

Let be, let be!

Would I were dead, but that, methinks, already—

What was he that did make it?—See, my lord,

Would you not deem it breath'd, and that those veins

Did verily bear blood?"

"One of those highly-important completions of the old, and imperfect, text of Shakespeare, consisting of a whole line, where the sense is left unfinished without it, here occurs. Warburton saw that something was wanting, but in note 3 it is suggested that Leontes in his ecstasy might have left his sentence unfinished: such does not appear to have been the case. . . . [The Manuscript-corrector of the folio, 1632] thus supplies a missing line, which we have printed in Italic type:—

‘ Let be, let be !

Would I were dead, but that, methinks, already

I am but dead, stone looking upon stone.

What was he that did make it ?’ &c.

But for this piece of evidence, that so important an omission had been made by the old printer, or by the copyist of the manuscript for the printer’s use, it might have been urged, &c. . . . However, we see above, that a line was wanting, and we may be thankful that it has been furnished, since it adds much to the force and clearness of the speech of Leontes.” Collier’s Notes and Emendations, &c. p. 197.

Mr. Collier is mistaken in saying that Warburton considered the text as defective: Warburton’s note runs thus; “The sentence completed is;

‘—but that, methinks, already I converse with the dead.’

But there his passion made him break off.” Still, there is room to suspect that something has dropt out: and, on first reading the new line,— it appeared to me so exactly in the style of Shakespeare, that, like Mr. Collier, I felt “thankful that it had been furnished.” But presently I found that it was too Shakespearean.

“ I am but dead, stone looking upon stone,”—

. L

Only a few speeches before, Leontes has exclaimed ;

“ O, thus she stood,
Even with such life of majesty (warm life,
As now it coldly stands), when first I woo'd her.
I am asham'd: *does not the stone rebuke me,
For being more stone than it?*—O royal piece,
There's magic in thy majesty, which has
My evils conjur'd to remembrance, and
From thy admiring daughter took the spirits,
Standing like stone with thee!”

Now, which is the greater probability?—that Shakespeare (whose variety of expression was inexhaustible) repeated himself in the line,— or that a reviser of the play (with an eye to the passage just cited) ingeniously constructed the said line, to fill up a supposed lacuna? The answer is obvious.

“ I am but dead, stone looking upon stone?”

KING JOHN.

Act i. sc. 1.

"With that half-face would he have half my land."

In my Remarks on Collier's and Knight's eds. of Shakespeare, p. 87, I endeavoured to shew that Mr. Collier had injudiciously retained the reading of the old copies,—

"With half that face would he have half my land,"— and I urged that "half that face" was merely a transposition made by a mistake of the original compositor. To what I have there said, let me add,—that a question in Fletcher's Love's Pilgrimage, act ii. sc. 4,—

"Where's the falconer's half-dog he left?"

stands thus nonsensically in the first folio, by an accidental transposition,—

"Where's the half Falconer's dog he left?"

Act i. sc. 1.

"Lady F. King Richard Cœur-de-lion was thy father;
By long and vehement suit I was seduc'd
To make room for him in my husband's bed:—
Heaven lay not my transgression to my charge!—
Thou art the issue of my dear offence,
Which was so strongly urg'd, past my defence."

So the passage used to be read from the time of Rowe (who, in the last line but one, altered "That art" of the old copies to "Thou art"), till Mr. Knight and Mr. Collier published their editions, where the close is exhibited thus;

"Heaven! [the folios have no point here] lay not my transgression to my charge,
That art the issue of my dear offence," &c.

"Lady Faulconbridge," observes Mr. Knight, "is not invoking Heaven to pardon her transgression;" but she says to her son,—for Heaven's sake, lay not (thou) my transgression to my charge that art the issue of it." Mr. Collier's explanation makes the old lady less of a hardened sinner: according to him, she means; "Let not heaven and you, that art the issue of my dear offence, lay the transgression to my charge." Mr. Knight thinks that the reading of the old copy is "in Shakespeare's manner;" Mr. Collier that "no alteration is required."

That these gentlemen should ever have been able to satisfy themselves with such interpretations,—that Mr. Knight should have brought himself to believe that could signify, "For heaven's sake, lay not thou my transgression to my charge," and Mr. Collier seriously to opine that it was equivalent to "Let not heaven and you lay," &c.,—is to me a matter of downright astonishment.

"Heaven! lay not my transgression to my charge"

No words were more frequently confounded by our early compositors than "thou" and "that." The reason is obvious:—"thou" was often written "y," and "that" often written "y." (We frequently find those abbreviated forms preserved in print : so the first folio has, in the present tragedy,— “ Eng. France, y shalt rue this houre within this houre.

Bast. Old Time the clocke setter, y bald sexton Time,” &c.

Act iii. sc. 1.)

Act ii. sc. 1.

“ Even till that England, hedg'd in with the main,” &c.

Compare Greene's Spanish Masquerado, 1589; “Seeing how secure we [i. e. the English] slept for that wee were hedged in with the sea,” &c. Sig. B 4.

Act ii. sc. 1.

“ All preparation for a bloody siege,
And merciless proceeding by these French,
Comfort your city's eyes,” &c.

So the old copies.—“ It has been urged by those who wished to adhere to the text of the folios, as long as it was unimpugned by any old authority, that ‘comfort’ was here used ironically: Rowe did not think so, when he printed confront; but the corrector of the folio, 1632, with less violence, has—‘ Come 'fore your city's eyes,’ &c.”

Collier's Notes and Emendations, &c. p. 202.

It is to be hoped that no future editor will reject the certain emendation of Rowe for one, which, if it had been proposed by a critic of the present day, would have met with deserved contempt.

As to "comfort" being "used ironically," see my Remarks on Collier's and Knight's eds. of Shakespeare, p. 88.

Act ii. sc. 2.

"K. John. France, hast thou yet more blood to cast away ?
Say, shall the current of our right roam on," &c.

So Malone, Mr. Collier, and Mr. Knight,—because the first folio has "rome." But "rome" is manifestly a misprint for "runne" (or perhaps for "ronne," as the ms. might have had that spelling); and the editor of the second folio rightly substituted "run." Steevens justly remarks; "The King would rather describe his right as running on in a direct than in an irregular course, such as would be implied by the word roam." (In this play the first folio is not uniform in the spelling of run; but it has "runnes tickling vp and downe," act iii. sc. 3; "when we haue runne so ill," act iii. sc. 4; "runne to meet displeasure," act v. sc. 1.)

Act iii. sc. 1.

"Cons. O Lewis, stand fast ! the devil tempts thee here,
In likeness of a new untrimmed bride."

On the word "untrimmed," how have the commentators written ! how have I myself written ! how foolishly, all of us !

I now see* (and with wonder at my former blindness) that nothing more is required than the change of a single letter,—that, beyond the possibility of doubt, Shakespeare wrote,—

“In likeness of a new up-trimmed bride.”

Compare what he elsewhere says of a bride;

“Go, waken Juliet; go, and trim her up.”

Romeo and Juliet, act iv. sc. 4.

So too Marlowe;

“But by her glass disdainful pride she learns;
Nor she herself, but first trimm'd up, discerns.”

Ovid's Elegies, — Works, iii. 174, ed. Dyce.

Act iii. sc. 3.

“If the midnight bell

Did, with his iron tongue and brazen mouth,
Sound on into the drowsy race of night.”

So the old copies.

“The folio, 1632, as amended, has,—

‘Sound on into the drowsy ear of night,’ instead of ‘race of night,’ as it stands in the folios: when ‘ear’ was spelt eare, as was most frequently the case, the mistake was easy, and we may now be pretty sure that ‘race’ was a mistake.” Collier’s Notes and Emendations, &c. p. 205.

Whether the emendation “ear” originated with the

* This emendation was mentioned as mine by Mr. Singer in Notes and Queries for July 3d, 1852.

Manuscript-corrector, or whether he derived it from some prompter's copy,—I feel assured that it is the poet's word. The same correction occurred, long ago, to myself: it occurred also to Mr. Collier, while he was editing the play; and (as appears from his note ad l.) he would have inserted it in the text, had not his better judgment been overpowered by a superstitious reverence for the folio.

But, if the Manuscript-corrector considered "on" to be an adverb (and we are uncertain how he understood it,—"on" and "one" being so often spelt alike), my conviction would still remain unshaken, that the recent editors, by printing "on," have greatly impaired the grandeur and the poetry of the passage. Steevens well observes; "The repeated strokes have less of solemnity than the single notice, as they take from the horror and awful silence here described as so propitious to the dreadful purposes of the king. Though the hour of one be not the natural midnight, it is yet the most solemn moment of the poetical one; and Shakespeare himself has chosen to introduce his Ghost in Hamlet,—

‘The bell then beating one.’”

As to the "contradiction" which the recent editors object to in "the midnight bell sounding one," I can only say that, in such a passage, a poet may be forgiven for not expressing himself according to the exact matter of fact, when even prose-writers, from the earliest times to the present, occasionally employ very inaccurate language in speaking of the hours of darkness: e. g.;

"It happened that betweene twelve and one a clocke at midnight, there blew a mighty storme of winde against the house," &c. The Famous History of Doctor Faustus, sig. x 3, ed. 1648.

"We marched slowly on because of the carriages we had with us, and came to Freynstat about one a clock in the night perfectly undiscover'd." Defoe's Memoirs of a Cavalier, p. 119, first ed.

"Left Ostend in the steam-boat at three o'clock in the night." Journal by Cary, the translator of Dante,—Memoir of him by his Son, vol. ii. 254.

Act iv. sc. 1.

"Yet, I remember, when I was in France,
Young gentlemen would be as sad as night,
Only for wantonness."

"I doubt," says Malone, "whether our author had any authority for attributing this species of affectation to the French. He generally ascribes the manners of England to all other countries."

The French may or may not have been the inventors of this singular mark of gentility, which, it is well known, was once highly fashionable in England. But Nash, in one of his tracts, expressly mentions an assumed melancholy as one of the follies which "idle travellers" brought home from France. The passage is very curious. "What is there in Fraunce to be learnd more than in England, but falshood in fellowship, perfect slouenrie, to loue no man but for my pleasure, to sweare Ah par la mort Dieu when a mans hammes are scabd? For the idle Traueller (I meane not for the Souldiour), I have knowen some that haue continued there by the space of halfe a dozen yeare, and when they come [came] home, they haue hyd a little weerish leane face vnder a broad French hat, kept a terrible coyle with the dust in the streete in their long cloakes of gray paper, and spoke English strangely. Nought else haue they profited by their trauell, saue learnt to distinguish of the true Burdeaux grape, and knowe a cup of neate Gascoygne wine from wine of Orleance; yea, and peraduenture this also, to esteeme of the poxe as a pimple, to weare a veluet patch on their face, and walke melancholy with their armes folded." The Vnfortunate Traveller. Or, The Life of Jacke Wilton, 1594, sig. L 4.

M

Act v. sc. 2.

"This unheard sauciness, and boyish troops," &c.

So the old copies.

"The manuscript-corrector gives no countenance to Theobald's proposal to read unhair'd for 'unheard;' and that his attention was directed to the line, is evident from the fact that he makes an emendation, though not of much importance, in it; he reads:—

'This unheard sauciness of boyish troops.'

Collier's Notes and Emendations, &c. p. 210.

Theobald did more than "propose to read unhair'd,"—he fearlessly inserted it in the text; and all his successors, excepting Mr. Collier, have retained it.

The Manuscript-corrector's alteration (made, I presume, because he had forgotten that hair and hair'd were often spelt hear and heard,—e. g.;

"In face, in clothes, in speech, in eyes, in heare."

Harington's Orlando Furioso, B. xliiii. st. 34.

"Franticke Ambition, Enuie, shagge-heard Lust."

Chapman's Euthymniæ Raptus, &c. 1609, sig. r.)

introduces a genitive case, where, there is every reason to believe, Shakespeare did not intend one to occur ;

“ *This apish and unmannerly approach,
This harness'd masque, and unadvised revel,
This unhair'd sauciness, and boyish troops,
The king doth smile at; and is well prepar'd
To whip this dwarfish war, these pigmy arms,
From out the circle of his territories.*”

Besides, we may well doubt if any writer would or could use “unheard sauciness” for “unheard-of sauciness.”

“Unhair'd sauciness” is, of course, unbearded sauciness; and (as I remarked in a former publication) Faulconbridge now expresses to the Dauphin that contempt for him and his forces, with which in the preceding scene he had spoken of him to the King ;

“shall a beardless boy,
A cocker'd silken wanton, brave our fields ?” &c.

RICHARD II.

Act v. sc. 1.

“ thou most beauteous inn,
 Why should hard-favour'd grief be lodg'd in thee,
 When triumph is become an ale-house guest?”

Compare Dante, in the Vita Nuova;

“ O voi, che per la via d' Amor passate,
 Attendete, e guardate
 S' egli è dolore alcun quanto il mio graue:
 È prego sol ch' à vdir mi soffriate;
 È poi imagnate,
 S' io son d' ogni dolore hostello e chiaue.”

P. 9, ed. 1576.

FIRST PART OF HENRY IV.

Act i. sc. 2.

"Hear me, Yedward."

The commentators pass over "Yedward" without any remark.—It is a familiar corruption of "Edward," and, I believe, still retained in Cheshire and Lancashire.

Towards the end of the first act of Shadwell's Lancashire Witches, Clod, who speaks in the Lancashire dialect, uses "Yedard" for "Edward;"

"Doubt. Whose house is that?

Clod. Why, what a pox, where han yeow lived? why, yeow are strongers indeed! Why, 'tis Sir Yedard Hartfort's," &c.

Act iii. sc. 2.

"rash bavin wits,

Soon kindled, and soon burn'd."

The editors give no example of "bavin" used adjectively. The following passage affords one;

"Nay, M. Mamon, misinterpret not;

I onely burne the bauen heath of youth,

That cannot court the presence of faire time

With ought but with, What newes at court, sweet sir?"

Jacke Drums Entertainment, sig. A 3, ed. 1616.

Act iv. sc. 1.

"The quality and hair of our attempt Brooks no division."

"In the quartos of 1598 and 1599, 'heire' [of the folio] was haire, the old mode of spelling hair; and this, the old corrector assures us, was the true word, the meaning of the speaker being (as suggested in note I), that the power he, and the other revolted lords could produce, was too small to allow of any division of it." Collier's Notes and Emendations, &c. p. 237.

That "hair" is "the true word," was probably never questioned by a single reader of the passage, with the exception of Boswell (who thought that "perhaps hair is put for air"), and of Mr. Knight (who inserts "air" in his text). That Mr. Collier is quite mistaken about "the meaning of the speaker," I have indisputably proved in Remarks on Collier's and Knight's eds. of Shakespeare, p. 108.

Act v. sc. 2.

"Sound all the lofty instruments of war,
And by that music let us all embrace;
For, heaven to earth, some of us never shall
A second time do such a courtesy."

"Warburton," writes Mr. Collier, "was of opinion that the poet meant that the odds were so great, that heaven might be wagered against earth, that many present would never embrace again. This is a mistake, according to the manuscript-corrector: Hotspur calls heaven and earth to witness to the improbability that some of those present would ever have an opportunity of regreeting each other :—

‘Fore heaven and earth, some of us never shall
A second time do such a courtesy.’ ”

Notes and Emendations, &c. p. 239.

In the first place :—“ ‘Fore heaven ” is a sort of petty oath which belongs to familiar dialogue (as in Othello, act ii. sc. 3, “ ‘Fore heaven, they have given me a rouse,”—“ ‘Fore heaven, an excellent song ”), and is therefore altogether at variance with the solemn tone of the present passage. In the second place :—if any one should urge that “ the expression substituted by the Manuscript-corrector is not ‘ ‘Fore heaven,’ but ‘ ‘Fore heaven and earth ’ ” (a very unusual expression indeed), and that “ we find something similar in The Tempest, act iv. sc. 1,

‘ afore heaven

I ratify this my rich gift,’ ”—

my answer is, that, even supposing “ ‘Fore heaven and earth ” to be a formula of attestation not inadmissible in a passage of the utmost seriousness, still we have what amounts almost to positive proof that Shakespeare did not employ it here; because the word “ For,”—which the Manuscript-corrector converts into “ ‘Fore,”—seems indispensably necessary to introduce the reason why they should all embrace on that occasion,—

“ *Sound all the lofty instruments of war,
And by that music let us all embrace ;
FOR,* ” &c.

Act v. sc. 3.

"Hot. The king hath many marching in his coats."

"This is intelligible, and does not positively require change; but the old corrector substitutes a word for 'marching' (the forces, at this time, were fighting, not marching), which seems much better adapted to the place:—

'The king hath many masking in his coats.'

Collier's Notes and Emendations, &c. p. 240.

Surely, the Manuscript-corrector was perfectly right when he made this alteration. In Tamburlaine, Part First, act v. sc. 2, a line used to stand thus,—

"And march in cottages of strowed reeds,"— till, in my edition of Marlowe's Works, i. 99, I altered "march" to "mask."

SECOND PART OF HENRY IV.

Act ii. sc. 3.

"The time was, father, that you broke your word,
When you were more endear'd to it than now."

Here "endear'd" is equivalent to—engaged, bound.
The word is used much in the same sense by Day;

"You did indeare him to society
Of carelesse wantons," &c.

Law-Trickes, 1608, sig. H 2.

Act ii. sc. 3.

"it [i. e. his honour] stuck upon him, as the sun
In the grey vault of heaven."

To modern readers there is perhaps something coarse in this expression; but it was not so to those of Shakespeare's days;

"While Lucifer fore-shewes Auroras springs,
And Arctos sticks about the earth vnmou'd," &c.

Chapman's Byrons Tragedie, sig. N 4, ed. 1608.

"No black-eyed star must sticke in vertues speare."

Dekker's Satiromastix, 1602, sig. L 2.

Act ii. sc. 4.

"Then, death, rock me asleep, abridge my doleful days!
Why then, let grievous, ghastly, gaping wounds
Untwine the sisters three! Come, Atropos, I say!"

It can hardly be doubted, I think, that, in this rant of Pistol, Shakespeare had an eye to the following passage of Buckingham's Complaynt, written by Sackville;

"But what may boote to stay the Sisters three,
When Atropos perforce will cut the thred?
The dolefull day was come, when you might see Northampton field with armed men orespred," &c.
St. 6 (Mirroure for Magistrates).

Act v. sc. 3.

"a dish of carraways."

Here "carraways" is rightly explained by Warburton (though his explanation has been ignorantly questioned), "a comfit or confection so called in our author's time,"—the said carraways being made, of course, with carraway seeds.

In Shadwell's Woman-Captain, carraway-comfits are mentioned as no longer fit to appear at fashionable tables; "the fruit, crab-apples, sweetings and horse-plumbs; and for confections, a few carraways in a small sawcer, as if his worship's house had been a lowsie inn." Works, iii. 350.

SECOND PART OF HENRY VI.

Act i. sc. 3.

"1 Pet. My masters, let's stand close: my lord Protector will come this way by and by, and then we may deliver our supplications in the quill."

Much has been written about "in the quill." Mr. Hunter (New Illustr. of Shakespeare, ii. 66) says that "'quill' means here the narrow passage through which the Protector was to pass;" and he infers this meaning from the following lines in Sylvester's Du Bartas (The Ark, p. 114, ed. 1641);

"And th' endlesse, thin ayre (which by secret quils
Had lost it selfe within the winds-but hils," &c.

But if we turn to the original French, it will be seen that no light is thrown on "quill" in Shakespeare by "quils" in Sylvester, who used the word merely because he was translating literally;

"Et puis l'air infini, qui par secrets tuyaux,
Rare, c'estoit perdu dans les sombres caueaux
Des monts butes des vents," &c.

In a later part of the same work (The Tropheis, p. 201) Sylvester has,

"Anon, like Cedron, through a straighter quill Thou strainest out a little brook or rill;"

the original of which is,

" or dans un sec tuyau
Pousses, comme Cedron, vn petit filet d'eau."

(" Tuyau. A pipe, quill, cane, reed, canell." Cotgrave's Dict.)

"The several petitioners," says Mr. Collier, "were to deliver their supplications to Suffolk in succession, one after another, and 'the quill' ought, indisputably, to be sequel, used ignorantly for sequence." Notes and Emendations, &c. p. 280.

But why should Peter, whose language is elsewhere correct enough, "use" a word "ignorantly" on this one occasion? Besides, when a dramatist puts a wrong word into the mouth of a comic character, there is always something ludicrous, or inclining to the ludicrous, in the mistake of the speaker: according to the Manuscript-corrector's alteration, there is nothing of the kind here.

Read "in the quoil" = coil (i. e. the stir which will take place when the Protector comes).

THIRD PART OF HENRY VI.

Act ii. sc. 5.

"Fath. *These arms of mine shall be thy winding-sheet;
My heart, sweet boy, shall be thy sepulchre,*

* * * * *

And so obsequious will thy father be,
Men, for the loss of thee, having no more,
As Priam was for all his valiant sons."

When Shakespeare wrote the first two lines (to which there is nothing parallel in The True Tragedie of Richard Duke of Yorke), he was thinking, it would seem, of Marlowe's Jew of Malta, where the Governor, on seeing the dead body of his son, exclaims,—

"What sight is this? my Lodowick [Lodovico] slain!

These arms of mine shall be thy sepulchre."

Marlowe's Works, i. 289, ed. Dyce.

In the last line but one, the misprint "Men" was altered by Rowe to "Sad," which Malone and Mr. Knight adopted. Steevens conjectured "Man," and Mr. Collier inserted it in his text.

"The word 'Men' is merely the printer's mistake, who carelessly began the line with M instead of E :—

'E'en for the loss of thee,' &c.

There can be little objection to receive this trifling, but effectual, emendation at the hands of the old corrector." Collier's Notes and Emendations, &c. p. 293.

Mr. Collier appears not to be aware that in my Remarks, &c., published in 1844, I said, "Surely 'Men' must be a misprint for 'E'en.'" p. 133.

RICHARD III.

Act i. sc. 2.

"Anne. Set down, set down your honourable load."

Here Shakespeare had in his recollection a line at the commencement of a scene in the Sec. Part of The Troublesome Raigne of King John;

"Set downe, set downe the load not worth your paine."

Sig. κ 4, ed. 1622.

Act i. sc. 4.

"false, fleeting, perjur'd Clarence."

The word "fleeting," applied to a person, is of very rare occurrence (Steevens, I presume, could call to mind no instance of it, for he illustrates the present line by "the fleeting moon" from Antony and Cleopatra). Sir John Harington, in his Orlando Furioso, has;

"But Griffin (though he came not for this end,
For praise and bravery at tilt to run,
But came to find his fleeting female friend)," &c.

B. xvii. st. 18.

Act iii. sc. 4.

"And this is Edward's wife, that monstrous witch,
Consorted with that harlot, strumpet Shore,
That by their witchcraft thus have marked me."

So Malone, Mr. Collier, and Mr. Knight, with an erroneous punctuation in the second line, which ought to stand,—

“Consorted with that harlot strumpet Shore,”—

“harlot” being here an adjective. Compare ;

“O harlot whore, why should I stay my hands?

* * * * *

Locrinus now (quoth she) had not thus dide,

If such an harlot whore he had not tooke.”

A Mirour for Magistrates, &c. p. 34, ed. 1610.

Act v. sc. 3.

“I died for hope, ere I could lend thee aid.”

The reading, “died for hope,” has been questioned: but (however we are to understand it) the following passage in Greene’s James the Fourth seems to determine that it is right ;

“Twixt love and fear continual are the wars.

The one assures me of my Ida’s love,

The other moves me for my murder’d queen.

Thus find I grief of that whereon I joy,

And doubt in greatest hope, and death in weal.

Alas, what hell may be compar’d with mine,

Since in extremes my comforts do consist !

War then will cease, when dead ones are reviv’d ;

Some then will yield, when I am dead for hope.”

Works, ii. 149, ed. Dyce.

HENRY VIII.

Act ii. sc. 2.

"Enter Wolsey and Campeius."

Shakespeare is not the only great poet that has introduced Campeius. In the Orlando Furioso, c. xlvi. st. 11, Lorenzo Campeggi figures among the illustrious persons who congratulate Ariosto on the completion of his labours.

Act iii. sc. 2.

"I have ventur'd,
Like little wanton boys that swim on bladders,
This many summers in a sea of glory," &c.

In Fairfax's Tasso, B. ii. st. 68, is,— a metaphor not in the original. That celebrated translation* appeared in 1600. Shakespeare's Henry VIII., there seems to be no doubt, was produced at a later date.

"The sea of glorie hath no bankes assignde,"—

* It has been praised somewhat beyond its merits by critics who knew very little about the original. That Fairfax possessed considerable power as a poet, is not to be denied: but unfortunately, instead of being content to translate Tasso, he is continually introducing allusions and similes of his own invention, and frequently in the worst possible taste; for instance, at p. 186, ed. 1600;

"This said, that narrow entrance past the knight,
(So, creepes a camell through a needles eie)," &c. !!!

O

Often, too, he falls into the most outrageous tautology : there are hundreds of passages like the following ;

" With publike praier, zeale, and faith deuout,
The aide, assistance, and the helpe obtaine
Of all the blessed of the heau'nly rout,
With whose support you conquest sure may gaine." p. 195.

(" Sia dal cielo il principio : invoca innanti,
Nelle preghiere pubbliche e devote,
La milizia degli Angioli e de' Santi,
Che ne impetri vittoria ella che puote.")

" Tomorrow is a day of paines and war,
This of repose, of quiet, peace and rest ;
Goe, take your ease this evening and this night," &c. p. 198.

(" Quel fia giorno di guerra e di sudore ;
Questo sia d' apparecchio e di quiete :
Dunque ciascun vada al riposo," &c.)

" From their strong foes vpon them following
To [Thou] maist them keepe, preserue, saue and defend." p. 216.

(" Se stuol nemico seguitando viene, Lui risospingi, e lor salva e defendi.")

" This said, he fled through skies, through cloudes, and aire." p. 220.

(" Ciò disse ; e poi n' andò per l' aria a volo.")

To haste or carelessness perhaps we must attribute such a mistake as this ;

" He turnd about, and to good Sigiere spake,
Who bare his greatest sheild and mightie bow,
That sure and trustie target let me take,
Impenetrable is that sheild I know," &c. p. 206.

(" Onde rivolto, dice al buon Sigiero,
Che gli portava un altro scudo e l' arco :
Ora mi porgi, o fedel mio scudiero,
Cotesto meno assai gravoso incarco," &c.)

It is by exchanging his large shield for a lesser shield that Godfrey exposes himself to the shafts of Clorinda, who forthwith wounds him.

TROILUS AND CRESSIDA.

Act i. sc. 3.

An. "the thing of courage,
As rous'd with rage, with rage doth sympathize,
And, with an accent tun'd in self-same key,
Retires to chiding fortune."

The modern editors give (with Pope) "Returns." Hanmer read "Replies;" and so the Manuscript-corrector of the folio, 1632.

Did not Shakespeare write "Retorts to chiding fortune?"

Act iii. sc. 2.

"The falcon as the tercel, for all the ducks i' the river."

Mr. Collier's note on this passage is; "The meaning seems to be, that the 'falcon,' or female hawk, is as good as the 'tercel,' the male hawk."—Tyrwhitt unnecessarily proposed to read "at the tercel."

Monck Mason's explanation, "I will back the falcon against the tiercel—I will wager that the falcon is equal to the tiercel," is proved to be the right one by a passage in Fletcher's Love's Pilgrimage, when Diego and Incubo are parting different ways in search of Leocadia. Mason has cited only a portion of that passage: I subjoin it entire;

Inc. Best to divide.

Diego. I'll this way.

Inc. And I this.

Diego. I, as you, find him for a real!

Inc. 'Tis done.

Diego. My course is now directly to some pie-house;
I know the pages' compass.

Inc. I think rather
The smock-side o' the town the surer harbour
At his years to put in.

Diego. If I do find
The hungry haunt, I take him by the teeth now.

Inc. I by the tail; yet I as you.

Diego. No more.

[Exeunt severally."]

Act v. sc. 1.

ROMEO AND JULIET.

Act ii. sc. 1.

"Young Abraham Cupid, he that shot so trim," &c.

Upton altered "Abraham" to "Adam," understanding the allusion to be to the celebrated archer Adam Bell; and, since Upton's time, the alteration has been adopted by all editors, except Mr. Knight, who retains "Abraham," which he explains to mean "the cheat—the 'Abraham man'—of our old statutes."

That Shakespeare here had an eye to the ballad of King Cophetua and the Beggar Maid, is certain;

"The blinded boy that shootes so trim
From heaven down did hie,
He drew a dart, and shot at him
In place where he did lye."

But this stanza contains nothing to countenance in the slightest degree the reading "Adam Cupid."

In Soliman and Perseda, 1599, we find,—

"Where is the eldest sonne of Pryam,
That abraham-coloured Troion? dead."

Sig. n 3.

in Middleton's Blurt, Master Constable, 1602,—

"A goodlie, long, thicke, Abram-colour'd beard."

Sig. d.

and in our author's Coriolanus, act ii. sc. 3, according to the first three folios, "not that our heads are some browne, some blacke, som Abram;" there being hardly any reason to doubt that in these passages "abraham" (or "Abram") is a corruption of "abron," which our early writers frequently employ for "auburn." Is, then, the right reading in the present line,—

"Young abram [or auburn] Cupid," &c.,

Shakespeare having used "abram" for "auburn-haired," as the author of Soliman and Perseda has used "abraham-colour'd Troion" for "Trojan with auburn-coloured hair?" Every body familiar with the Italian poets knows that they term Cupid, as well as Apollo, "Il bióndo Dio:" and W. Thomas, in his Principal Rules of the Italian Grammer, &c., gives; "Biondo, the aberne [i. e. auburn] colour, that is betwene white and yelow." Sig. E 2, ed. 1567. In The Two Gentlemen of Verona, act iv. sc. 4, "auburn" means yellowish,—

"Her hair is auburn, mine is perfect yellow."

Act ii. sc. 2.

"at lovers' perjuries,
They say, Jove laughs."

Malone (who would not allow that Shakespeare could read Ovid) observes that he might "have caught this" from Greene's Metamorphosis. Yes; and he might have found it in Italian;

"Quel che si fa per ben Dio non aggrava, Anzi ride el spergiuero de gli amanti."

Bojardo,—Orlando Innam. lib. 1. c. xxii. st. 42.

Act iii. sc. 2.

"Spread thy close curtain, love-performing night,
That run-aways eyes may wink, and Romeo
Leap to these arms, untalk'd of, and unseen!"

"The line of Juliet's speech, as usually printed,

'That run-away's eyes may wink,' &c.

has always been a stumbling-block, and perhaps no emendation can be declared perfectly satisfactory. The change proposed by the corrector of the folio, 1632, at all events makes very clear sense out of the passage, although it may still remain a question, whether that sense be the sense of the poet? another subsidiary question will be, how so elaborate a misprint could have been made out of so simple and common a word? He gives . . . 'That enemies' eyes may wink.' . . . In the margin of the folio, 1632, enemies is spelt enimyes; but the letters are, perhaps, too few to have been mistaken for run-awaies. At the same time it seems extremely natural that Juliet should wish the eyes of enemies to be closed," &c. Collier's Notes and Emendations, &c. p. 381.

Both Mr. Collier and Mr. Knight, in their editions of Shakespeare, adopted the villanous conjecture of Zachary Jackson,—“That, unawares, eyes may wink:” and other conjectures have more recently been offered by myself and others, all perhaps bad enough, but certainly quite as good as the Manuscript-corrector's “enemies’.”

The spelling of the first folio is "run-awayes," not, as Mr. Collier seems to suppose, "run-awaies."

I now venture to submit another conjecture to the reader;—

"That roving eyes may wink," &c.

a conjecture founded on the supposition that the word "roving" having been written (and written rather illegibly) "roauinge" (Fairfax, in his Tasso, B. iv. st. 87, has,

"At some her gazing glances roauing flew"), the compositor metamorphosed it into "run-awayes."

Act iv. sc. 4.

Cap. Come stir, stir, stir! the second cock hath crow'd,
The curfew-bell hath rung, 'tis three o'clock:—
Look to the bak'd meats, good Angelica;
Spare not for cost.

Nurse. Go, go, you cot-quean, go.
Get you to bed: 'faith, you'll be sick tomorrow
For this night's watching.

Cap. No, not a whit. What! I have watch'd ere now
All night for lesser cause, and ne'er been sick.

La. Cap. Ay, you have been a mouse-hunt in your time," &c.

"A cot-quean," says Mr. Hunter, "is the wife of a faithless husband, and not, as Johnson, who knew little of the language of Shakespeare's time, explains it, 'a man who busies himself about kitchen affairs.' It occurs twice in Golding's translation of the story of Tereus. The Nurse is speaking to Lady Capulet, and the word calls forth all the conversation which follows about jealousy. Authorities for this being the true sense might be produced in abundance." New Illustr. of Shakespeare, ii. 138.

But Golding, in the passage to which Mr. Hunter refers, has cuc-queane, which is a distinct word from cot-quean, though they are sometimes confounded by early writers,—a cuc-quean (cuck-quean, or cock-quean) meaning a she-cuckold; a cot-quean, a man who busies himself too much in women's affairs. In Fletcher's Love's Cure, act ii. sc. 2, Bobadilla says to Lucio (who has been brought up as a girl), "Diablo! what should you do in the kitchen? cannot the cooks lick their fingers, without your over-seeing? nor the maids make pottage, except your dog's head be in the pot? Don Lucio? Don Quot-quean, Don Spinster! wear a petticoat still, and put on your smock a' Monday; I will have a baby o' clouts made for it, like a great girl;"—where "Quot-quean" is a corrupt form of "Cot-quean." Even in Addison's days the word cot-quean was still used to signify one who is too busy in meddling with women's affairs: see the letter of an imaginary lady in The Spectator, No. 482.—Mr. Hunter's notion, that "the Nurse is speaking to Lady Capulet," is, I think, sufficiently disproved by the context.

Act v. sc. 1.

"If I may trust the flattering eye of sleep,
My dreams presage some joyful news at hand."

So Malone, following the valuable quarto of 1597. The meaning (about which he and some other commentators make such a pother) is, in vulgar prose,—If I may trust the visions with which my eye flattered me during sleep.

P

Both Mr. Collier and Mr. Knight give, with the quarto of 1599, the later quartos, and the folios, "the flattering truth of sleep:" Mr. Collier, however, makes no attempt to explain that reading; neither does Mr. Knight, who merely observes, "It is not difficult to see the growth of that philosophical spirit in Shakespeare which suggested the substitution of the word 'truth,' which opens to the mind a deep volume of metaphysical inquiry,"—intimating perhaps that it would require a whole volume to make plain to us what Shakespeare meant by the word "truth."

The Notes and Emendations, &c. furnish us with a new reading. "Sleep," says Mr. Collier, "is often resembled to death, and death to sleep; and when Romeo observes, as the correction in the folio, 1632, warrants us in giving the passage,—

'If I may trust the flattering death of sleep,' he calls it 'the flattering death of sleep' on account of the dream of joyful news from which he had awaked: during this 'flattering death of sleep,' he had dreamed of Juliet, and of her revival of him by the warmth of her kisses." p. 384.

Now, I have not forgotten how our early writers characterise Sleep,—for instance, I recollect that Sleep is called by Sackville "cousin of Death" and "a living death," and by Daniel, "brother to Death;" but I remember nothing in the whole range of poetry which bears any resemblance to such a combination of words as "the flattering death of sleep;" and, though I may lay myself open to the charge of presumption, I unhesitatingly assert, not only that the expression never could have come from Shakespeare's pen, but that it is akin to nonsense.

Act v. sc. 1.

"[Rom.] The world is not thy friend, nor the world's law:
The world affords no law to make thee rich;
Then, be not poor, but break it, and take this.

Ap. My poverty, but not my will, consents.

Rom. I pay thy poverty, and not thy will."

A writer in The Westminster Review, vol. xliv. p. 61, says that "Mr. Knight [in the last line of the above passage] very properly restores the reading of the second 4to and the first folio, 'pray:' the relation here is between Romeo's earnestly repeated prayer and the apothecary's consent: the moment for paying him is not yet arrived." But what does the writer understand by the concluding words of Romeo's preceding speech, "take this?" can he doubt that "this" means the gold which Romeo holds in his hand, ready to pay the Apothecary?

Act v. sc. 3.

"Par. I do defy thy conjurations."

Both Mr. Knight and Mr. Collier having rejected the reading "conjurations" for the misprint "commiseration," and Mr. Collier having observed that "the sense of conjurations is not clear," I adduced a passage from an early drama, where "conjunction" signifies earnest entreaty (see Remarks, &c. p. 176). It may not be useless to notice here, that the word occurs in the same sense in a once-admired modern novel: "the arguments, or rather the conjurations, of which I have made use," &c. Mrs. Sheridan's Sidney Bidulph, vol. v. p. 74.

JULIUS CÆSAR.

Act iv. sc. 3.

"The enemy, marching along by them,
By them shall make a fuller number up,
Come on refresh'd, new-added, and encourag'd."

"The corrector of the folio, 1632, implies by his proposed change, that 'new-added' is merely a repetition of what is said in the preceding line—'by them shall make a fuller number up'—and he inserts a word instead of 'added,' which is not only more forcible, but more appropriate, and which we may very fairly suppose had been misheard by the scribe:—

'By them shall make a fuller number up,
Come on refresh'd, new-hearted, and encourag'd.'

The error might be occasioned by the then broad pronunciation of 'added' having been mistaken for hearted." Collier's Notes and Emendations, &c. p. 402.

I can hardly think that Mr. Collier is serious in the concluding sentence.

Here the Manuscript-corrector does away with one "repetition," only to introduce another: for what is the difference between "hearted" and "encourag'd?"

Read,—

"Come on refresh'd, new-aided, and encourag'd."

Act v. sc. 1.

"I draw a sword against conspirators;
When think you that the sword goes up again?—
Never, till Cæsar's three and twenty wounds
Be well aveng'd; or till another Cæsar
Have added slaughter to the sword of traitors."

"Steevens," says Mr. Collier, "subjoined what he considered a parallel passage from 'King John,' act ii. sc. 2:—

'Or add a royal number to the dead,
With slaughter coupled to the name of kings.'

There is certainly some resemblance, but it is stronger when the quotation from 'Julius Cæsar' is printed as the old corrector advises:—

'or till another Cæsar
Have added slaughter to the word of traitor.'

Octavius terms Brutus a traitor, and challenges him to add slaughter to the word, in the same way that slaughter in 'King John' was to be coupled 'to the name of kings.' This emendation seems plausible, though we may not be disposed to insist upon it." Notes and Emendations, &c. p. 402.

The Manuscript-corrector's alteration (to say nothing of its tameness) is a most unnecessary one. Surely, Octavius means;—"or till you, traitors, have added the crime of slaying me (another Cæsar) to that of having murdered Julius."

MACBETH.

Act i. sc. 3.

“As thick as tale,
Came post with post.”

Mr. Collier (Notes and Emendations, &c. p. 406) informs us that the Manuscript-corrector of the folio, 1632, has left the word “tale” unaltered.

In my Remarks on Collier's and Knight's eds. of Shakespeare, p. 188, I declared myself “strongly inclined to believe that ‘hail’ is the right reading:” I now entertain no doubt that it is so; because I am convinced that such an expression as “thick as tale” was never employed by any writer whatsoever; while, on the contrary, “thick as hail” is of common occurrence;

“Curse, ban, and breath out damned orisons,
As thicke as haile-stones for[e] the springs approach.”

First Part of The Troublesome Raigne of King John, sig. F 4, ed. 1622.

“The English archers shoot as thick as haile.”

Harington's Orlando Furioso, B. xvi. st. 51.

“Rayning down bullets from a stormy cloud,
As thick as hail, upon their armies proud.”

Sylvester's Du Bartas,—Fourth Day of First Week,
p. 38, ed. 1641.

“More thick they fall then haile,” &c.

A Herrings Tayle, &c. 1598, sig. c 2.

"Darts thick as haile their backs behinde did smite."

Niccols's King Arthur,—A Winter Night's Vision, &c.

(Contin. of A Mir. for Mag.), 1610, p. 588.

Act i. sc. 3.

"Come what come may,

Time and the hour runs through the roughest day"

The commentators have given several examples of this expression from English authors. It is not unfrequent in Italian;

"Ma perch' e' fugge il tempo, e così l' ora, La nostra storia ci convien seguire."

Pulci,—Morg. Mag. c. xv. last stanza.

"Ferminsi in un momento il tempo e l' ore."

Michelagnolo,—Son. xix.

"Aspettar vuol ch' occasion gli dia,

Come dar gli potrebbe, il tempo e l' hora."

Dolce,—Prime Imprese del Conte Orlando,

c. xvii. p. 145, ed. 1572.

Act i. sc. 4.

"Thou art so far before,

That swiftest wing of recompense is slow

To overtake thee."

The second folio has "wine of recompense,"—which the Manuscript-corrector of that folio alters to "wind of recompense;" and Mr. Collier says, "This may, or may not, have been the line as it came from the poet's pen:

at all events, and for some unexplained reason, a person writing soon after 1632 seems to have preferred wind to 'wing,' when either would answer the purpose." Notes and Emendations, &c. p. 407.

I cannot be persuaded that "either reading would answer the purpose:" I think that "wing" is decidedly right,—that "wind" is one of the worst emendations in Mr. Collier's volume.

Act i. sc. 5.

"the golden round,
Which fate and metaphysical aid doth seem
To have thee crown'd withal."

The words which Shakespeare here applies to a diamond had been previously applied to a ring by Abraham Fraunce ;

"Wedding ring, farewell ! shee's gone, whose yuory finger
Should haue been thy grace : full well did I cause to be grauen
In thy golden round those words as true as a Gospell, Loue is a bitter-sweete, fit woords for bitter Alexis."

Sec. Part of The Countesse of Pembrokes Yuychurch, 1591, sig. κ 4.*

* Perhaps in Milton (who was a careful reader of many poets now long forgotten) we may trace some slight obligations to Fraunce's hexameters ;

"I fled, and cried out Death !
Hell trembled at the hideous name, and sigh'd
From all her caves, and back resounded Death."

Par. Lost, b. ii. 787.

"Death, sayd euery man : Death, death with an eccho rebounded."
The Countess of Pembrokes Emanuel, 1591, sig. c 2.

Act i. sc. 6.

"Buttress nor coigne of vantage."

The editors are at a loss for an example of coigne in "Darkness must overshadow all his bounds, Palpable darkness, and blot out three days."

Par. Lost, b. xii. 187.

"There shall fogs and mystes and smokes and palpable horror
Wring out teares from her eyes," &c.

First Part of the Countess of Pembrokes Yuychurch, 1591, sig. B 2.

I take this opportunity of pointing out a few of Milton's recollections of various writers, which his editors have failed to notice:—

1. "The imperial ensign; which, full high advanc'd, Shone like a meteor streaming to the wind," &c.

Par. Lost, b. i. 536.

"In Sion towres hangs his victorious flagge,
Blowing defiance this way; and it shewes
Like a red meteor in the troubled aire," &c.

Heywood's Four Prentices of London, sig. G, ed. 1615.

2. "Behold a wonder! They but now," &c. Par. Lost. b. i. 777.

"and yet (behold a wonder)," &c.

Harington's Orlando Furioso, b. i. st. 22.

3. "In darkness, and with dangers compass'd round."

Par. Lost, b. vii. 27.

"But being now with danger compass round."

Harington's Orlando Furioso, b. i. st. 50.

4. "Grace was in all her steps." Par. Lost, b. viii. 488.

"Nè senza somma grazia un passo muove."

Ariosto, Orlando Fur. c. xlvi. st. 92.

5. "To behold the wandering moon,
Riding near her highest noon."

Il Penseroso.

"Now the goodly moone
Was in the full, and at her nighted noone."

Drayton's Man in the Moone,—Poems, p. 476, fol.

any other writer than Shakespeare. It is certainly a word of rare occurrence :—

“ And Caps of Hope, last coign of Africa.”

Sylvester's Du Bartas,—The Colonies,
p. 129, ed. 1641.

(The original has “ angle dernier d'Afrique.”)

Act i. sc. 7.

“ Macb. Pr'ythee, peace.

I dare do all that may become a man ;
Who dares do more is none.

Lady M. What beast was't, then,
That made you break this enterprize to me ?
When you durst do it, then you were a man,” &c.

“ Surely,” says Mr. Collier, “ it reads like a gross vulgarism for Lady Macbeth thus to ask, ‘ What beast made him divulge the enterprize to her ? ’ but she means nothing

-
6. “ Find out some uncouth cell.” L'Allegro.
“ Upon our plaines, or in some uncouth cell.”

Wither and Browne's Shepherds Pipe (The Seventh Eglogue), sig. κ 8, ed. 1620.

- 7 “ O nightingale, that on yon bloomy spray Warblest at eve,” &c.

Sonnet i.

“ Thence thirty steps, amid the leafie sprays
Another nightingale repeats her layes.”

Sylvester's Du Bartas,—Fifth Day of First Week,
p. 44, ed. 1641.

8. “ Of which all Europe rings from side to side.”

Sonnet xxii.

“ And of the which all Europe new doth ring.”

Harington's Orlando Furioso, b. xlvi. st. 55.

of the kind: she alludes to Macbeth's former vaunt that he was eager for the deed, and yet could not now 'screw his courage' to the point, when time and place had, as it were, 'made themselves' for its execution: this she calls [according to the Manuscript-corrector of the folio, 1632] a mere boast on his part:—

‘What boast was't, then,
That made you break this enterprize to me?’

she charges him with being a vain braggart, first to profess to be ready to murder Duncan, and afterwards, from fear, to relinquish it. That this emendation might be guessed by a person who carefully read the text, without attention to the conventional mode of giving and understanding these words, we have this proof—that it was communicated to the editor of the present volume, six months ago, by an extremely intelligent gentleman, whose name we have no authority to give, but who dated from Aberdeen, and who had not the slightest knowledge that boast, for ‘beast,’ was the manuscript reading in the folio, 1632. It is very possible, therefore, that the old corrector of the folio, 1632, arrived at his conclusion upon the point by the same process: on the other hand, it is impossible to deny that he may have had some authority, printed,* written, or oral, for the proposed change; and it is quite certain that people have been in the habit of reading ‘Macbeth’ for the last 200 years, some of them for the express purpose of detecting blunders in the text, and yet, as far as can be ascertained, have never once hit upon this improvement, so trifling as regards typography, but so valuable as respects the meaning of Shakespear." Notes and Emendations, &c. p. 408.

* I cannot conceive what printed authority Mr. Collier alludes to. Does he suppose that Macbeth appeared in print before it was included in the folio of 1623?

For a moment, after first reading this emendation, I thought it a very happy one. On reflection, it appears to me very questionable.

An accomplished critic* has remarked on it as follows. "Here Mr. Collier reasons, as it appears to us, without sufficient reference to the context of the passage, and its place in the scene. The expression immediately preceding, and eliciting, Lady Macbeth's reproach, is that in which Macbeth declares that he dares do all that may become a man, and that who dares do more is none. She instantly takes up that expression. If not an affair in which a man may engage, what beast was it, then, in himself or others, that made him break this enterprise to her? The force of the passage lies in that contrasted word, and its meaning is lost by the proposed substitution." The Examiner, Jan. 29, 1853.

Mr. Collier (as we have just seen) speaks of "Macbeth's former vaunt that he was eager for the deed," and, in the Preface to his volume, p. xix., of Macbeth having "previously vaunted his determination to murder Duncan." But where is the copy of the play which contains any thing of the sort? In the preceding scenes, according to the received text, the language of Macbeth, when talking to his wife about the murder, is as far removed from vaunting as it possibly can be.

Nor is the emendation of the Manuscript-corrector unobjectionable on the score of phraseology. A "boast making one break an enterprise to another" is hardly in the style of an experienced writer.

Be it also observed, that in Antony and Cleopatra,

* Mr. John Forster.

act i. sc. 5, the Manuscript-corrector has substituted "boastfully" for "beastly," to the destruction of the meaning evidently intended by the poet.

Act ii. sc. 2.

"The multitudinous seas incarnardine, Making the green one, red."

To the passages cited here by the commentators, add—

"And, dronke with bloud, from blue
The sea take blushing hue ;
As iuice of Tyrian shell,
When clarified well,
To wolfe of finest fields
A purple glosse it yeeldes."

The Tragedie of Antonie, 1595, (by the Countess of Pembroke, from the French,) sig. f 8.

Act ii. sc. 4.

"A falcon, towering in her pride of place."

On "towering" the commentators have no remark; perhaps not being aware that it is a term of falconry. Donne, addressing Sir Henry Goodyere, and speaking of his hawk, says ;

"Which when herselfe she lessens in the aire,
You then first say, that high enough she toures."
Poems, p. 73, ed. 1633.

Turberville tells us ; "Shee [the hobby] is of the number of those Hawkes that are hie flying and towre Hawks." Booke of Falconrie, p. 53, ed. 1611.

Act iii. sc. 3.

"and near approaches
The subject of our watch."

The Manuscript-corrector of the folio, 1632, "puts 'here' in his margin [for 'near']; either may be right." Collier's Notes and Emendations, &c. p. 411.

If Mr. Collier had carefully considered the context, he would have perceived that "here" cannot be right:—

"1 Mur. Then stand with us.
The west yet glimmers with some streaks of day:
Now spurs the lated traveller apace,
To gain the timely inn; and near approaches
The subject of our watch.

3 Mur. Hark! I hear horses.

Ban. [within.] Give us a light there, ho!

2 Mur. Then it is he," &c.

The First Murderer knew, from the coming on of night, that Banquo was not far off; but, before hearing the tread of horses and the voice of Banquo, he could not know that the victim was absolutely close at hand.

Act iii. sc. 4.

"If trembling I inhabit, then protest me
The baby of a girl."

For this very doubtful reading of the old copies, the Manuscript-corrector of the folio, 1632, substitutes,

"If trembling I exhibit, then protest me," &c.

(i. e. If I exhibit trembling);—an alteration, which Mr. Collier allows to be "too prosaic" (Notes and Emendations, &c. p. 412), and which, in fact, is all but ludicrous.

Act iii. sc. 5.

"Get you gone,
And at the pit of Acheron
Meet me i' the morning."

It is not a little amusing to read the notes on "Acheron," and to find Malone almost persuaded by a Mr. Plumptre that Shakespeare was thinking here of "Ekron" in Scripture.* Did these matter-of-fact commentators suppose that Shakespeare himself, had they been able to call him up from the dead, could have told them "all about it?" Not he;—no more than Fairfax, who, in his translation of the Gerusalemme (published before Macbeth was produced), has made Ismeno frequent "the shores of Acheron," without any warrant from Tasso;

"A Christian once, Macon he now adores,
Nor could he quite his wonted faith forsake,
But in his wicked arts both oft implores
Helpe from the Lord and aide from Pluto blake;
He, from deepe caues by Acherons darke shores
(Where circles vaine and spels he vs'd to make),

* I understand that in Macbeth, as it is now acted at the Princess's Theatre, there is a perfectly correct representation of "the pit of Acheron."

T' aduise his king in these extremes is come;
Achitophell so counsell'd Absalome."

B. ii. st. 2.

(The original has merely,—

" Ed or dalle spelonche, ove lontano
Dal vulgo esercitar suol l' arti ignote, Vien," &c.)

Act iv. sc. 1.

" Enter HECATE and the other three Witches."

When, in my Remarks on Collier's and Knight's editions of Shakespeare, p. 200, I said that "the other three Witches" are "the three who now enter for the first time, there being already three on the stage: the number of Witches in this scene is six,"—I made a great mistake, which was obligingly pointed out to me by Mr. Macready.

"The other three Witches" means the three already on the stage,—they being the other three, when enumerated along with Hecate, who may be considered as the chief Witch. Three Witches are quite sufficient for the business of the scene; and, as far as concerns the effect to be produced on the spectators, are even more impressive than six.

Act v. sc. 3.

" And, with some sweet oblivious antidote,
Cleanse the stuff'd bosom of that perilous stuff
Which weighs upon the heart."

"From the writer of the manuscript notes in the Folio, 1632, we learn that grief ought to have been inserted instead of 'stuff'." Collier's Notes and Emendations, &c. p. 416.

I must not be understood as positively maintaining the integrity of the old text, when I express my strong suspicion that the Manuscript-corrector altered "stuff" to "grief" merely because he was offended by an iteration which had gone much out of fashion at the time he wrote. Malone (in a note on the line) has already brought forward several* examples of similar repetitions from other plays of Shakespeare—(repetitions which, as well as his quibblings in serious dialogues, &c., the great poet would doubtless have avoided, had he lived in an age of severer taste); and I subjoin a variety of passages which will evince the fondness of our early authors for a jingle of that description;

"I Harold then, a harauld [i. e. herald] sent in haste."

King Harold,—A Mir. for Magistrates, &c.
p. 248, ed. 1610.

"In dreadfull feare amid the dreadfull place."

Sackville's Induction,—Id. p. 261.

"Of which the kings charge doth me cleere discharge."

Tiptoft Earle of Worcester,—Id. p. 369.

"I saw the polles cut off from polling theeues."

Richard Neuill Earle of Warwicke,—Id. p. 374.

"My selfe heere present do present to thee

My life," &c. The Lord Hastings,—Id. p. 411.

"On her [i. e. the Church] a strong hand violently laid, Preying on that they gaue for to be pra'd."

The Lord Cromwell (by Drayton),—Id. p. 539.

* Many more might be adduced,—such as,

"Dy'd in the dying slaughter of their foes."

King John, act ii. sc. 2.

R

"They wreake their vengeance in his reeking blood."

King Edward the Second,—Id. (Contin. by Niccols), p. 709.

"The cannons thicke discharg'd on either hand,
Wrapt clouds in clouds of smoake," &c.

England's Eliza (by Niccols, appended to A Mir. for Mag.), p. 828.

"For Hell and Darkness pitch their pitchy tents."

Marlowe's Tamburlaine, Sec. Part,—Works, i. 215, ed. Dyce.

"Whose yielding heart may yield thee more relief."

Marlowe's Dido,—Id. ii. 413.

"Lyke as a trembling hart, whose hart is pierst with an arrow," &c.

A. Fraunce's Countess of Pembrokes Yuychurch, Part. Sec., 1591, sig. 1 4.

"There was a maide soe made as men might thinck her a goddesse."

*Translation from Heliodorus,—*appended to the same, sig. M.

"O Duke of Sore, what great sore didst thou find,
To see thy noble sonne so foule betraid," &c.

Harington's Orlando Furioso, b. xxxvi. st. 7.

"With true measur'd crowing the timely houres to speake,
And still against his windie sire to winde his beake."

A Herrings Tayle, &c. 1598, sig. B 2.

"And not one foot his stedfast foot was moued," &c.

Fairfax's Tasso, b. v. st. 63

(one of the innumerable things in that translation which are not to be found in the original).

"Her garment side [i. e. long], and, by her side, her glauë."

Id. b. ix. st. 8.

"Were for the glorious sunne-shine of my sonnes."

B. Barnes's Diuels Charter, 1607, sig. B 2.

"Whilst by my furie Furies furious made," &c.

W. Alexander's [Lord Stirling's] Tragedie of Julius Cæsar, sig. Q 4, ed. 1607.

"Great Pompey's pomp is past, his glorie gone."

Id. sig. R 2.

"And force his forces from the Brittish shores."

Armin's Valient Welshman, sig. c 3, ed. 1615.

"T' inflame the Flamine [Flamen] of Jove Ammon so," &c.

Sylvester's Du Bartas,—First Day of the First Week, p. 6, ed. 1641.

"And toward the bottom of this bottom [i. e. ball] bound."

Id.,—Third Day of the First Week, p. 25.

"Fair rose this Rose with truth's new-springing raies."

Id.,—ibid. p. 26.

"And still-green laurel shall be still thy lot."

Id.,—ibid. p. 29.

"Here, on a green, two striplings stripped light," &c.

Id.,—Seventh Day of the First Week, p. 59.

"There th' ugly Bear bears (to his high renown)

Seav'n shining stars."

Id.,—The Columnnes, p. 141 [139].

"Where up he mounts, and doth their Mount surprise."

Id.,—The Vocation, p. 152.

"As black as jet they jet about."

Id.,—ibid. p. 155.

"To grave this short remembrance on my grave."

Drummond,—Sonnet to Sir W. Alexander

(a sonnet of great beauty, most carefully composed).

"And, Reading [the name of the person addressed], of the world thou read'st aright."

Hubert's Edward the Second, p. 129, ed. 1629.

"There hang a gauntlet bright, here a stabt buckler, Pile up long piles [i. e. darts]," &c.

Fuimus Troes, 1633, sig. F 3.

I could easily adduce many other passages: but, not to weary the reader, I close the list with proofs that even the lofty Muse of Milton did not disdain a jingle;

"That brought into this world a world of woe."

Par. Lost, b. ix. 11.

"He all their ammunition
And feats of war defeats."

Samson Agon. 1277.*

Further,—it may be asked if the Manuscript-corrector's alteration does not introduce a great impropriety of expression,—"CLEANSE the bosom of GRIEF"?

Act v. sc. 5.

"And all our yesterdays have lighted fools
The way to dusty death."

The commentators (who hunt for something parallel in the Psalms, Sidney's Arcadia, and Pierce Plowman) evi-

* The old Italian poets occasionally affect the same sort of repetition;
e. g.:

"Cosi, quando quell' altro hebb' egli scorto,
Seco s' affronta, e in men ch' io non fauello,
Hebbe il franco Rugger quel Morte morto,
Che non potea trouar maggior flagello."

Dolce,—Prime Imprese del Conte Orlando,
c. xvii. p. 142, ed. 1572.

dently suppose that the very striking expression, "dusty death," is found for the first time in Macbeth. But I meet with it in a poem which was published more than a dozen years before the appearance of that tragedy ;

" Time and thy graue did first salute thy nature,
Euen in her infancie and cradle-rightes,
Inuiting it to dustie deaths defeature,
And therewithall thy Fortunes fierce despights:
Death is the gulfe of all : and then I say,
Thou art as good as Cæsar in his clay."

A Fig for Fortune, 1596, by Anthony Copley,
p. 57 [49].

HAMLET.

Act i. sc. 1.

“ We may presume that in this first scene a cock was heard to crow, in order to give the Ghost notice of the fit time for his departure, Cock crows being placed in the margin opposite the words ‘ Stop it, Marcellus.’ ” Collier’s Notes and Emendations, &c. p. 418.

The cock used to crow when Garrick acted Hamlet, and perhaps also when that part was played by some of his successors; but now-a-days managers have done wisely in striking out the cock from the list of Dramatis Personæ.

Act i. sc. 2.

“ discourse of reason.”

Boswell, by several examples, has supported the phraseology of the text against Gifford, who rather hastily asserted that we ought to read “ discourse and reason.” To the passages cited in Boswell’s note, add the following one; “ There was no discourse of reason strong enough to diuert him from thinking that he was betrayed.” A Tragi-comicall History of our Times, under the borrowed names of Lisander and Calista (from the French), 1627, p. 34.

Act i. sc. 2.

“ In my mind’s eye.”

So the Italians :—

“E ch' io punisca il traditor di Gano
D' un tradimento già, ch' io veggo scorto
Con gli occhi de la mente in uno specchio,” &c.
Pulci,—Morg. Mag. c. xxiv. st. 4.

“Ora a l' occhio mentale è conceduto
Di riveder ciò che tu hai veduto.”
Id.,—ibid. c. xxv. st. 308.

Act i. sc. 2.

“whilst they, distill'd
Almost to jelly with the act of fear,
Stand dumb, and speak not to him.”

The quartos have “distill'd,” the folio has “bestil'd.”

“Neither word, ‘distill’d’ or bestill’d, can be perfectly satisfactory; but it is apparent that bestill’d was a misprint in the folio, 1623 (and from thence copied into the folio, 1632), for a word, very like it in letters, but affording a very clear and sensible meaning:—

‘Whilst they, bechill'd
Almost to jelly with the act of fear,’ &c.

Bernardo and Marcellus were almost chilled to jelly by their apprehensions, ‘the cold fit of fear’ having come powerfully upon them. This must be deemed a text superior to that of any old or modern edition.” Collier’s Notes and Emendations, &c. p. 420.

Is there not something strange in such an expression as “human bodies CHILLED almost to JELLY by fear”?

(One modern editor of Hamlet has given "bestill'd:" but I doubt if the verb still (to fall in drops, melt) ever was, or could be, used with the augmentative prefix be.)

Why should the "distill'd" of the quartos be considered as "not perfectly satisfactory?"—"they, melted, dissolved almost to jelly with the act of fear," &c. Examples of the word in that sense are not wanting in modern writers: a passage of Claudian (De Sexto Cons. Hon. v. 345),

"liquefactaque fulgure cuspis Canduit, et subitis fluxere vaporibus enses,"— is thus rendered by Addison,

"Swords by the lightning's subtle force distill'd,
And the cold sheath with running metal fill'd."
Remarks on Several Parts of Italy, &c. p. 208, ed. 1745.

Act i. sc. 4.

"Ham. The king doth wake to-night, and takes his rouse," &c.

Whatever may have been the original meaning of "rouse," and whatever may be its precise signification in the above line (see a long note on the word by Gifford—Massinger's Works, i. 239, ed. 1813), it undoubtedly was sometimes used in the sense of a large draught of liquor;

"Where slightly passing by the Thespian spring,
Many long after did but onely sup;
Nature then fruitfully forth these men did bring,
To fetch deepe rowes from Jous plenteous cup."

Drayton's Verses prefixed to Chapman's
Hesiod, 1618.

(Concerning "wake" in the present passage, see my Remarks on Collier's and Knight's eds. of Shakespeare, p. 210.)

Act i. sc. 4.

"why the sepulchre,
Wherein we saw thee quietly in-urn'd,
Hath op'd his ponderous and marble jaws,
To cast thee up again?"

Perhaps the reading of the quartos (of all the quartos), "interr'd," is preferable, because "in-urn'd" implies that the body had been reduced to ashes. (Compare act i. sc. 1;

"What art thou, that usurp'st this time of night
Together with that fair and warlike form
In which the majesty of buried Denmark
Did sometimes march?"")

Act i. sc. 4.

"Which might deprive your sovereignty of reason."

There seems to be no doubt that Gifford was wrong in supposing "sovereignty" to be here "a title of respect;" and that the meaning is—Which might take away the sovereignty of your reason (or, as Steevens explains it, "take away from you the command of reason, by which man is governed").

In a note on Beaumont and Fletcher, Works, ix. 272, I have shewn that "deprive" is used there, as it is here, in the sense of—take away. Compare also;

s

“And now, this hand, that, with vngentle force
Depry'd his life, shall with repentant seruice
 Make treble satisfaction to his soule.”

The Tryall of Cheualry, 1605, sig. F 3.

“For pittie, do not my heart blood deprive,
 Make me not childless,” &c.

Sylvester's Du Bartas,—The Magnificence,
 p. 210, ed. 1641,

(where the original has “Ne me prive du sang,” &c.).

“But yet the sharp disease (which doth his health deprive)
 With-holdeth in some sort his senses and his wit,” &c.

A Paradox against Liberty, from the French of Odet de la Nove,—ibid. p. 313.

“In short, this day our scepter had depriv'd,
 Had I not,” &c.

The History of Judith, translated by Hudson,— ibid. p. 377.

Act i. sc. 5.

“Thus was I, sleeping, by a brother's hand,
 Of life, of crown, of queen, at once despatch'd.”

“An advantageous proposal is made in the corrected folio, 1632 . . . ‘Dispatch'd’ cannot be right, and why should Shakespeare employ a wrong word when another, that is unobjectionable, at once presented itself, viz.—

‘Of life, of crown, of queen, at once despoil'd?’

Misreading was, most likely, the cause of this blunder; the earliest quarto, 1603, has depriv'd for ‘dispatch'd,’ of the other quartos and folios; but we may feel confident that the poet's misprinted word was despoil'd. It is written upon an erasure, and possibly the old corrector first inserted depriv'd, and afterwards saw reason to change it to despoil'd, as the true language of the poet." Collier's Notes and Emendations, &c. p. 422.

Why "despatch'd," the reading of all the old editions (for the quarto of 1603 is not of any authority), should be condemned by Mr. Collier as a decided error of the press, I am at a loss to conceive. The "proposal" of the Manuscript-corrector is so far from being "advantageous," that, strictly speaking, we lose something by it,—"despoil'd" conveying merely the idea of deprivation, while "despatch'd" expresses the suddenness of the bereavement.

Act i. sc. 5.

"The glow-worm shows the matin to be near,
And 'gins to pale his uneffectual fire."

According to Warburton, "uneffectual" means "shining without heat;" according to Steevens, "that is no longer seen when the light of morning approaches." The former explanation is, I apprehend, the true one. Compare Nash; "The moral of the whole is this, that as the Estrich, the most burning-sighted bird of all others, insomuch as the female of them hatcheth not hir eggs by couering them, but by the effectual raies of hir eies," &c. The Vnfortunate Traveller. Or, The Life of Jacke Wilton, 1594, sig. H 4.

Act ii. sc. 2.

"for his picture in little."

Here Steevens cites Rowley, Drayton, and Massinger. He might have shewn that the expression "in little" was used by writers long after the time of Shakespeare: so in Shadwell's Sullen Lovers; "I will paint with Lilly [Lely], and draw in little with Cooper for 5000*l*." Works, i. 27.

Act ii. sc. 2.

"for it cannot be
But I am pigeon-liver'd and lack gall
To make oppression bitter; or, ere this,
I should have fatt'd all the region kites
With this slave's offal."

Mr. Collier observes; "It was not 'oppression,' but crime, that was to be punished by him; and to read [with the Manuscript-corrector of the folio]

'To make transgression bitter' is so far an improvement: the similarity in the sound of the terminations of both words may have misled the copyist. 'Oppression' is, however, quite intelligible." Notes and Emendations, &c. p. 424.

This alteration is nothing less than villanous. Could the Manuscript-corrector be so obtuse as not to perceive that "lack gall to make oppression bitter," means "lack gall to make me feel the bitterness of oppression?"

Act iii. sc. 2.

"Ham. Ay, sir, but, While the grass grows,—the proverb is something musty."

Malone quotes this proverb in full from Whetstone's Promos and Cassandra, 1578,— “ Whylst grasse doth growe, oft sterves the seely steede;” and from The Paradise of Daintie Devises, 1578,—

“ While grasse doth growe, the silly horse he starves.”

I find it, with a variation, in Whitney's Emblemes, 1586;

“ While grasse doth growe, the courser faire doth sterue.”

p. 26.

Act iii. sc. 2.

“ Now could I drink hot blood,
And do such business as the bitter day
Would quake to look on.”

So Malone, adhering to the quartos; while Mr. Collier and Mr. Knight adopt the reading of the folios,—

“ And do such bitter business as the day,” &c.

All this is marvellous! Can any thing be plainer than that, in the quartos, “bitter” is a misprint for “better” (as it often is; e.g.;

“ Here comes my bitter Genius, whose advice,” &c.

A pleasant conceited Comedy, how to choose a good Wife from a bad, 1634, sig. a 4);

that the editor or printer of the folio, not perceiving that it was a misprint, made his stupid transposition; and that the genuine lection is,

“ And do such business as the better day
Would quake to look on” ?

Did the modern editors never read in Milton,

“Hail, holy Light, offspring of Heaven,” &c. ?

Act iii. sc. 3.

“O, my offence is rank, it smells to heaven!”

So Petrarch ;

“Or vivi sì che a Dio ne venga il lezzo.”

Sonetto civ.

And see also Ariosto, Orlando Furioso, c. xviii. st. 23.

Act iii. sc. 4.

“A station like the herald Mercury,” &c.

To shew that “station” means here the act of standing [or manner of standing, attitude], Theobald and Steevens quote our author’s Antony and Cleopatra, act iii. sc. 3.— Other writers have employed the word in the same sense : so Fletcher ;

“What a strange scene of sorrow is express’d
In different postures, in their looks and station !
A common painter, eyeing these, to help
His dull invention, might draw to the life,” &c.

Lovers’ Progress, act iv. sc. 3.

Act iii. sc. 4.

“Your bedded hair, like life in excrements,
Starts up, and stands on end.”

In the Variorum Shakespeare, on the word "excrements," there is a note by Whalley, which is more to the purpose than much of the annotation in that omnium gatherum: still it may not be useless to cite here a passage from Chapman's Justification of a strange action of Nero, &c., 1629; "And albeit hayre were of it selfe the most abiect excrement that were, yet should Poppæas hayre be reputed honourable. I am not ignorant that hayre is noted by many as an excrement, a fleeting commodity An excrement it is, I deny not," &c. Sig. B 2.

Act iii. sc. 4.

"His form and cause conjoin'd, preaching to stones Would make them capable."

For examples of the word "capable," Malone, it would seem, was obliged to confine himself to the works of Shakespeare. Compare Euerie Woman in her Humor, 1609;

"Ser. We voide of hostile armes—

Hostis. I, if they had had horses, they had sau'd their armes.

Ser. Be capable [i. e. be intelligent,—understand me]. I meane, voide of armorie." Sig. D 4.

Act v. sc. 1.

"A pick-axe, and a spade, a spade,
For—and a shrouding sheet," &c.

In my Remarks on Collier's and Knight's eds. of Shakespeare, p. 218, I adduced several passages to prove that the modern editors were wrong in putting a break after

 "For." I subjoin another;

"The boyle was vp, we had good lucke, .
 In frost for and in snow."

Canting Song in Dekker's English Villanies, &c.
 sig. o 2, ed. 1632.

Act v. sc. 1.

"Imperious Cæsar, dead, and turn'd to clay," &c.

So the quartos. The folio, "imperial;" which Mr. Collier and Mr. Knight adopt. Malone observes; "The editor of the folio substituted imperial, not knowing that imperious was used in the same sense. . . There are other instances in the folio of a familiar term being substituted in the room of a more ancient word."

The right reading, whether the passage be or be not a quotation (see Collier's Notes and Emendations, &c. p. 430), is, in all probability, "imperious;" which in Shakespeare's time was the usual form of the word. So in the Countess of Pembroke's Tragedie of Antonie (translated from the French), 1595,—

"The scepters promis'd of imperious Rome."

Sig. G 3.

Even in Fletcher's Prophetess, written long after Hamlet, we have,—

"'tis imperious Rome, Rome, the great mistress of the conquer'd world."

Act ii. sc. 3.

Act v. sc. 1.

"Anon, as patient as the female dove
When that her golden couplets are disclos'd," &c.

Disclos'd means—hatched.. But I only notice the passage for the sake of pointing out to those who are curious in poetical phraseology the strange use of this word by Waller. In some lines To the Queen-mother of France upon her Landing, he addresses her as if she had been a second Leda ;

"Great Queen of Europe! where thy offspring wears
All the chief crowns; where princes are thy heirs;
As welcome thou to sea-girt Britain's shore,
As erst Latona, who fair Cynthia bore,
To Delos was: here shines a nymph as bright,
By thee disclos'd, with like increase of light."

KING LEAR.

Act iii. sc. 4.

“Edg. *Child Rowland to the dark tower came,
His word was still—Fie, foh, and fum,
I smell the blood of a British man.*”

Of the ballad here cited (and probably with some variation from the original) fragments of a Scottish version have been preserved by Jamieson in Illustr. of Northern Antiquities, &c. 4to, 1814. He gives (p. 402);

“With fi, fi, fo, and fum!
I smell the blood of a Christian man!
Be he dead, be he living, wi’ my brand
I’ll clash his harns frae his harn-pan,”

(i. e. I’ll knock his brains out of his skull). Child Rowland, it appears, was the youngest son of King Arthur.

OTHELLO.

Act i. sc. 3.

“ I therefore beg it not,
 To please the palate of my appetite ;
 Nor to comply with heat, the young affects
 In my defunct and proper satisfaction ;
 But to be free and bounteous to her mind :
 And heaven defend your good souls, that you think
 I will your serious and great business scant,
 When [Qtos For] she is with me. No, when light-wing'd toys
 Of feather'd Cupid seel [Qtos foil] with wanton dulness
 My speculative and offic'd instrument [Qtos active instruments],” &c.

“ We subjoin,” says Mr. Collier, “ the representation of the text as made by the corrector of the folio, 1632 :—

‘ I therefore beg it not,
 To please the palate of my appetite,
 Nor to comply wi’ the young effects of heat
 (In me defunct) and proper satisfaction,
 But to be free and bounteous to her mind :
 And heaven defend your counsels, that you think
 I will your serious and great business scant
 When she is with me. No ; when light-wing’d toys
 Of feather’d Cupid foil with wanton dulness
 My speculative and offic’d instruments,’ &c.

In the third line it seems that ‘ heat’ got transposed, while of was omitted; in the fourth line, me was misprinted 'my;' and in the sixth line, counsels became 'good souls,' terms Othello would hardly apply to the Duke and Senators of Venice. Foil, in the ninth line, agrees with the quartos, where instruments is also in the plural." Notes and Emendations, &c. p. 451.

One cannot but regret to see Mr. Collier labouring to account for an imaginary error in the old copies,—“‘heat’ got transposed, while of was omitted.” The error lies wholly with the Manuscript-corrector, whose emendation,— is not only very violent, but altogether objectionable. In the opening of this speech no alteration whatever is required, except that of a single letter,—the change of “my” to “me” (which was made by Upton);

“Nor to comply wi’ the young effects of heat,”

“Nor to comply with heat (the young affects
In me defunct) and proper satisfaction.”

“Affects,” says Johnson, (whose explanation is termed “rational and unforced” by Gifford, Massinger’s Works, ii. 30, ed. 1813) “stands here not for love, but for passions, for that by which any thing is affected. I ask it not, says he, to please appetite, or satisfy loose desires, the passions of youth which I have now outlived, or ‘for any particular gratification of myself,’ but merely that I may indulge the wishes of my wife.”—“Young affects” (writes Gifford, ubi supra) are therefore perfectly synonymous with youthful heats. Othello was not an old man, though he had lost the fire of youth; the critics might therefore have dismissed that concern for the lady, which they have so delicately communicated for the edification of the rising generation."

With respect to the other emendation of the Manuscript-corrector, "counsels" for "good souls," I would advise an editor of Shakespeare to weigh it well before he adopts it. What is the meaning of "Heaven defend your counsels"? (If "defend" be equivalent here, as Steevens supposes, to forbid, the alteration must be decidedly wrong.)

Act iii. sc. 3.

"I'd whistle her off, and let her down the wind," &c.

"Ajetter un oiseau. To cast, or whistle off, a hawke ; to let her goe, let her flie." Cotgrave's Dict.

Act v. sc. 1.

"Iago. Villainous whore!

Emil. She gave it Cassio ! no alas ! I found it,
And I did give 't my husband.

Iago. Filth, thou liest."

Here, when Iago calls his wife "filth," he uses a term synonymous with the word he has just applied to her. Compare Greene's Notable Discouery of Coosnage, &c. 1592 ; "To him will some common filth (that neuer knew loue) faine an ardent and honest affection." Sig. c 4.

ANTONY AND CLEOPATRA.

Act i. sc. 2.

"I must from this enchanting queen break off;
 Ten thousand harms, more than the ills I know,
 My idleness doth hatch.—How now! Enobarbus!"

Enter ENOBARBUS.Eno. What's your pleasure, sir?"

So all editions,—with a flagrant error.

It would be impossible, I presume, to point out, in any old writer, an instance of "How now!" used as the exclamation of a person summoning another into his presence. Here the right reading is indubitably,—

"Ho, Enobarbus!"

I have already shewn* that "ho" was very frequently spelt "how:" and the probability is, that in the present passage the author's manuscript had "how;" to which either some transcriber or the original compositor, who did not understand what was meant, added "now" (making the line over-measure).

Act i. sc. 5.

"So he nodded,
 And soberly did mount an arm-gaunt steed,

* See p. 56.

Who neigh'd so high, that what I would have spoke
Was beastly dumbe [dumb'd] by him."

"The first difficulty has arisen out of the epithet 'arm-gaunt,' and, without noticing other proposed emendations, we may state that Sir Thomas Hanmer's 'arm-girt' is precisely that of the old corrector, who also makes a very important change in the last hemistich, which, in the folios, stands,—

'Was beastly dumbe by him.'

The commentators have properly taken 'dumbe' as a misprint for dumb'd, and have referred to 'Pericles,' where dumbs is used as a verb. It seems that 'beastly' was not Shakespeare's word, which we can well suppose: in 'Macbeth' we have seen 'boast' misprinted beast, and in Henry V. (Chorus to Act iv.) we meet with the line,—

'Steed threatens steed in high and boastful neighs.'

In the passage before us, Alexas says that the 'arm-girt steed' neighed so 'high' that he could not address Antony: in what way, then, does the corrector of the folio, 1632, give the whole passage?—

So he nodded,
And soberly did mount an arm-girt steed,
Who neigh'd so high, that what I would have spoke
Was boastfully dumb'd by him.'

One slight objection to this change is that boastfully must be read as a dissyllable." Collier's Notes and Emendations, &c. p. 467.

"Arm-gaunt" has been variously explained,—lean-shouldered, as thin as one's arm, &c.: but Warburton's interpretation, worn lean and thin by much service in war, is the only one which would suit the passage; for, as Nares well observes (Gloss. sub v.), "all the rest of the senses are reproachful, and are therefore inconsistent with the speech which is made to display the gallantry of a lover to his mistress." Still, the interpretation of Warburton is at best extremely forced: and I make not the slightest doubt that the Manuscript-corrector and Sir Thomas Hammer were right in considering "arm-gaunt" a misprint for "arm-girt."

But why did the Manuscript-corrector alter "beastly" to "boastfully" (which I should have thought nobody could "read as a dissyllable," had not Mr. Collier declared that it "must be read" as such)? Merely because he happened not to perceive the meaning which Shakespeare evidently intended "beastly" to convey, viz. in the manner of a beast, —i. e. by inarticulate sounds, which rendered vain all attempts at speaking on the part of Alexas. (The adverb "beastly" occurs in The Taming of the Shrew, act iv. sc. 2, and in Cymbeline, act v. sc. 3,

"Fie on her! see, how beastly she doth court him!"

"and will give you that Like beasts, which you shun beastly.")

Act ii. sc. 7.

"Strike the vessels, ho!

Here is to Cæsar."

"Strike" (which the commentators had strangely misunderstood) was first rightly explained by Weber, who shewed, from a passage in Fletcher's Monsieur Thomas, that it meant tap. Compare also Love's Pilgrimage, act ii. sc. 4 (by the same poet); "Strike me the oldest sack."

Act iii. sc. 4.

"When the best hint was given him, he not took't,
Or did it from his teeth."

Thirlby's emendation (first inserted in the text by Theobald).

"The folio, 1623, has 'he not look'd,' and the folio, 1632, 'he had look'd.' There appears no sufficient ground for doing more than amend the frequent error of 'not' for 'but;' it avoids an awkwardness when Antony complains of Cæsar, that,—

'When the best hint was given him, he but look'd,
Or did it from his teeth.'

Such is the emendation in the folio, 1632, the meaning being, that Cæsar only look'd when the best hint was given him, or merely applauded Antony from his teeth, and not from his heart." Collier's Notes and Emendations, &c. p. 472.

The reading of the Manuscript-corrector has not only great obscurity of expression (Mr. Collier's explanation that "he but look'd" means "he only look'd," being rather an unsatisfactory one), but is also unsuited to what immediately follows,—

"he but look'd,
Or did it from his teeth."

U

I have little doubt that Thirlby's much simpler emendation, "took't" for "look'd" (which alters only a single letter,—the first folio having "look't") restores the genuine reading.

CYMBELINE.

Act ii. sc. 2.

“and this will witness outwardly,
As strongly as the conscience does within,
To the madding of her lord.”

It may not be useless to observe that “conscience” is used here for consciousness. (“As strongly as his inward consciousness.”)

Act iii. sc. 3.

“O, this life
Is nobler, than attending for a check;
Richer, than doing nothing for a babe;
Prouder, than rustling in unpaid-for silk.”

“The old copies give the third line,—

‘Richer than doing nothing for a babe,’

and Hanmer substituted ‘bribe,’ though bribes are seldom given for doing nothing, while Warburton has bauble, and Malone adhered to babe. All three are unquestionably wrong: the second line supposes a courtier to dance attendance, and only to obtain ‘a check,’ or reproof, for his pains; and the third line follows up the same notion that he does nothing, yet is rewarded with a blow: Shakespeare repeatedly uses bob (the word in manuscript in the margin of the folio, 1632) in this way : and babe, then pronounced with the broad open a, was miswritten for it: therefore, the passage, properly printed, appears to be this:—

‘O! this life
Is nobler, than attending for a check,
Richer than doing nothing for a bob,’ &c.”

Collier’s Notes and Emendations, &c. p. 494.

Though Mr. Collier patronises this correction, I cannot help regarding it as singularly infelicitous,—the word “bob” being almost ridiculously improper in the mouth of the present speaker, who is moralising very gravely. (Mr. Collier is mistaken in saying that “Shakespeare repeatedly uses bob.” it is found but once throughout his dramas, viz. in As you like it, act ii. sc. 7,—“senseless of the bob.”)

As to Malone’s notion that “babe” could here signify puppet,—one can only wonder at it. Neither “bauble” (which is Rowe’s, not Warburton’s, emendation), nor “bribe” seem to suit the passage. In all probability, the right reading is “brabe.” In a note ad l. Boswell observes; “Heth is thus explained by Speght in his Glossary to Chaucer: ‘Brabes and such like.’ Hething, for so Mr. Tyrwhitt gives the word, he interprets—contempt.”

THE END.

LONDON :

PRINTED BY LEVEY, ROBSON, AND FRANKLYN,
Great New Street and Fetter Lane.

BOOKS PUBLISHED BY JOHN RUSSELL SMITH,

36 SOHO SQUARE, LONDON.

In Two handsome Volumes, 8vo, cloth, 14s., The

POETICAL WORKS OF JOHN SKELTON,

(Post Laureate to Henry the Eighth.)

WITH NOTES AND SOME ACCOUNT OF THE AUTHOR AND HIS WRITINGS,

BY THE REV. ALEXANDER DYCE.

"The power, the strangeness, the volubility of his language, the audacity of his satire, and the perfect originality of his manner, made Skelton one of the most extraordinary writers of any age or country."—Southey.

"Skelton is a curious, able, and remarkable writer, with strong sense, a vein of humour, and some imagination. He had a wonderful command of the English language, and one who was styled in his turn, by as great a scholar as ever lived (Erasmus), 'the light and ornament of Britain.' He indulged very freely in his writings in censures on monks and Dominicans; and, moreover, had the hardihood to reflect in no very mild terms on the manners and life of Cardinal Wolsey. We cannot help considering Skelton as an ornament of his own time, and a benefactor to those who come after him."

. Originally published by the late Mr. Rodd. At his death most of the impression was bought by J. R. Smith. Copies are now offered for a short time at the above very reasonable price.

Just published in One Volume, 8vo, pp 448, with Engravings, cloth, 15s.

BRITANNIC RESEARCHES ;

OR,

New Facts and Rectifications of Ancient British History.

BY THE REV. BEALE POSTE, M.A.

The new sources of information which it is professed to bring forward in this publication may be stated to be as follows:—1. Various passages in the Classics and ancient authors relating to Britain, before overlooked, misquoted, or wrongly translated or applied. 2. The work of Nennius on Ancient Britain, much elucidated and authenticated by the labours of modern commentators, as those of Messrs. Gunn and Stevenson; and we may add, in an especial manner, by the edition published at Dublin in 1847, from valuable Irish manuscripts, with notes of the Rev. Dr. Todd and the Hon. Algernon Herbert. 3. Several important passages in the ancient historian Gildas, relating to Britain, now first duly interpreted and applied, principally by the elucidations afforded by the more copious text of the Irish edition of the kindred work of Nennius. 4. Various Welsh documents, which frequently afford a species of conviction to the mind, impossible to be set aside, that they refer to real facts. 5. The rapid discovery of late years of ancient British coins; nearly one hundred new types, in addition to those before known to Ruding, having come to light, many of them highly explanatory of the former ones. In short, we now possess quite a copious ancient British coinage, which, as has been proved in the early history of every country, where monetary discoveries have come to the aid of the inquirer, cannot fail to be a valuable guide. It is in this case, indeed, an assistance somewhat important in its way, as the coins for the most part admit of such a classification, assigning them to various ancient British states, as will stand the test of the most rigid scrutiny. 6. The Angora Inscription, part of which relates to Britain. The Latin of this was published by Chishull, the Oriental traveller, in 1728, but was without sufficient authenticity, till the Greek duplicate was given to the world in the Travels of W. J. Hamilton, Esq., M.P. 2 vols. 8vo, 1842. It now forms quite a new page in British history, as confirming the ancient British Chronicles in some important points, forming, in fact, a keystone of much of the superstructure of their narrative. To the above we may add 7. Various Inscriptions relating to Britain; and some other miscellaneous sources of information.

PUBLISHED QUARTERLY.

Nos. I. II. and III. (No. IV. August 1st), price 2s. 6d. each,

THE RETROSPECTIVE REVIEW;

CONSISTING OF CRITICISMS UPON, ANALYSES OF, AND EXTRACTS FROM CURIOUS, USEFUL, AND VALUABLE OLD BOOKS.

Contents of No. I.

1. Mrs. Behn's Dramatic Writings.
2. Bishop Berkeley on Tar-Water.
3. French Pictures of the English in the last Century.
4. Eburne's "Plaine Pathway to Plantations;" on Population and Emigration at the beginning of the Seventeenth Century.
5. Increase Mather's Remarkable Providences of the earlier Days of American Colonisation.
6. The Travels of Boullaye-le-Gouz.
7. The First Edition of Shakespeare.

ANECDOTA LITERARIA:—Diary of John Richards, a Dorsetshire Gentleman, 1697-1702. Household Inventory of the Fifteenth Century. (From a MS. in private hands.)

COMMUNICATIONS AND CORRESPONDENCE:—On our Public Libraries.

Contents of No. II.

1. Pyrrhonism of Joseph Glanvill (an Essay on the Vanity of Dogmatizing and Confident Opinion).
2. Ferne's Blazon of Gentrie, and the Old Notions of Heraldry.
3. Herberstein's Russia in the Sixteenth Century.
4. Early English Ballad Poetry.
5. Andrew Borde's Boke of Knowledge.
6. The Scottish Colony of Darien, 1698-1700.
7. Political Satires: George the Third's Reign.
8. Popular Satires of Pierre Gringore.

ANECDOTA LITERARIA:—Continuation of Mr. Richards's Diary—Religious Fragment, in Anglo-Saxon, from a MS. at Copenhagen—Order of Shooting with the Cross-bow, in Verse, from MS. Arundel, in the British Museum.

Contents of No. III.

1. Ancient Ballad Poetry.
2. The Works of Henry Peacham.
3. James Gillray and his Caricatures.
4. Agriculture in Henry the Eighth's time.
5. Early Scottish History, and its Exponents.
6. Satires and Declamations of Thomas Nash.

ANECDOTA LITERARIA:—Poem supposed to be in the Lancashire Dialect of the Fourteenth Century, from a MS. in the Cottonian Library—A Burlesque Bill of Fare, from a MS. in the Ashmole Collection at Oxford.

"The title of this Review explains its objects. It is intended to supply a place unfilled in our periodical literature, and this first number is very satisfactory. The papers are varied and interesting, not overlaid by the display of too much learning for the general reader, but shewing sufficient research and industry on the part of the writers to distinguish the articles from mere ephemeral reviews of passing publications. In the prospectus the editor says: 'It is our design to select, from the vast field of the literature of the past, subjects which are most likely to interest modern readers; we shall lay before them, from time to time, essays on various branches of the literature of former days, English or foreign; we shall give accounts of rare and curious books; point out and bring forward beauties from forgotten authors; and tell the knowledge and opinions of other days.' The design is well carried out in this number, and will no doubt be further developed as the work advances. It is to be published quarterly, at a very moderate price, and will, we have no doubt, prove a successful undertaking."—Atlas

